Information on the trainings in Ministry of Interior in 2023

The Academy of the Ministry of the Interior conducts initial training for investigative police officers.

Courses and training for updating professional qualifications are also provided in the form of centralised courses at the AMoI and training for investigating police officers in the field (both face-to-face and distance learning).

In 2023, 102 investigative police officers were trained, with a further 40 newly recruited trainee civil servants expected to complete the initial professional training courses in early February 2024.

Investigative police officers are also involved in training organised by the National Institute of Justice and other training institutions at home and abroad.

In 2023, police officers participated in trainings organized by the National Institute of Justice on the following topics:

- "Protecting the financial interests of the European Union. Criminal offences. Functions of OLAF. European Public Prosecutor's Office;
- "Correlation of qualified theft and offence under Article 249 of the Criminal Code";
- "Preventing and combating trafficking in women for the purpose of their exploitation. Inter-institutional cooperation and exchange of good practices".

Specialised training on the recovery of assets acquired through criminal activity was conducted under the Anti-Corruption Commission project.

Six three-day training seminars on prevention and counteraction of corruption, the first two of which were international, were held in Varna, Burgas and Blagoevgrad districts between 25 September and 17 November 2023 under the Norwegian Financial Mechanism's Home Affairs Programme. During the seminars, 210 police officers from the SVD and the 27 regional directorates of the Ministry of Interior were trained.

Other topics on which trainings have been conducted in 2023 within the framework of projects funded by the Norwegian Financial Mechanism are as follows:

- "Applying risk assessment in cases of domestic and gender-based violence, including to combat Roma stereotypes";
