ABSTRACT

Several initiatives aimed at strengthening the resilience of the German judiciary are under way. Discussions are on-going about a possible reform to enhance the resilience of the Constitutional Court by including certain safeguards in the Constitution. The Ministry of Justice has presented a proposal to introduce further safeguards for the use of the power of Ministers of Justice at Federal and Länder level to issue instructions to prosecutors in individual cases. Measures to further promote the respect of constitutional values by lay judges, and for ordinary judges before their initial appointment, are under consideration in Parliament. Some steps have been taken to supplement the overall resources for the judiciary through additional investments, while the level of remuneration of judges remains a challenge. Digitalisation efforts in the judiciary are underpinned by a multi-annual investment programme and a number of dedicated legislative initiatives. However, discussions on the proposal to introduce digital documentation of main proceedings in criminal cases have stalled. The justice system overall continues to perform efficiently and measures to deal with so-called ‘mass’ civil cases are being discussed in Parliament.

The update of Germany’s strategic anti-corruption framework for the federal administration remains pending. A number of legislative reforms increasing transparency and enhancing the prevention of corruption entered into force, including the lobby register, post-employment rules, whistleblower protection and political party and campaign finance. Work to establish a legislative footprint has advanced for Ministers but is still lacking for the Parliament. Shortcomings remain in the enforcement of conflicts of interest rules for parliamentarians and Government officials. A criminal law reform was put forward to criminalise the trading in influence, yet only when committed by members of the Parliament and under certain circumstances. Amendments of administrative offence provisions to strengthen liability and sanctions of legal persons to fight foreign bribery more effectively are still outstanding. High-level corruption is addressed without any systemic weaknesses identified.

The framework regulating the state media authorities and media ownership transparency has remained stable; in addition, reflections on revising the media concentration framework are ongoing. In 2023, stronger compliance safeguards for public service broadcasters were agreed, with a proposal for further reform of the system set to be presented in autumn 2024. While the Government maintains its plans to establish in law the right to information of the press as regards federal authorities and plans to present a draft reform in 2024, no concrete further steps have been taken so far. Authorities and journalists cooperate to address risks to the safety of journalists in the exercise of their work, in view of concerns related to an increasingly hostile perception in society of journalists and media.

As regards the legislative process, timeframes for stakeholder consultations at federal level vary in practice while the commitment to create a single portal for all legislative proposals remains outstanding. The German Institute of Human Rights was re-accredited with A-status in October 2023. There have been no concrete steps taken yet to address the uncertainty regarding the tax-exempt status of non-profit organisations, and practical concerns resulting from this persist. In addition, the overall situation of civic space has seen some deterioration, with certain restrictions related to the right to protest being subject to judicial review.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, Germany has made:

- Some progress on stepping up efforts to ensure adequate resources for the justice system, including on the level of remuneration for judges, taking into account European standards on resources and remuneration for the justice system.
- Some progress on proceeding with plans to introduce a ‘legislative footprint’ to allow for the monitoring and tracing of all interest representatives who seek to influence and contribute to specific legislative texts.
- Some further progress on strengthening the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing consistency of the different applicable rules, the transparency of authorisations for future employment of high-ranking public officials, and the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries.
- No further progress on advancing with the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to official document.
- No progress yet on taking forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations.

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to Germany to:

- Take measures to ensure an adequate level of remuneration for judges and prosecutors, taking into account European standards on remuneration for the justice system.
- Further strengthen the ‘legislative footprint’ by disclosing all interest representatives’ inputs to legislation and by extending the scope to the parliamentary phase of the legislative procedure.
- Strengthen the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries.
- Advance with the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to official documents.
- Take forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

The court system in Germany is structured in a federal manner. Jurisdiction is exercised by federal courts and by the courts of the sixteen federal states ('Länder'). The main share of competence and workload regarding the administration of justice lies with the *Länder*¹. The court structure is divided between the ordinary jurisdiction (civil and criminal) and specialised courts (administrative, finance, labour and social courts). Appointment of judges and prosecutors, except for the Federal Courts and the Prosecutor General at the Federal Court of Justice, falls within the competence of the Länder. While appointment procedures differ in details between the Länder, all share common core elements, in particular the principle of merit² and the judicial review of the process and decisions relating to appointments. For the Federal Courts, a judges' selection committee selects judges for appointment by the executive and Councils of judges of the relevant courts have to be consulted in this process³. There are currently 638 local courts, 115 regional courts and 24 higher regional courts, as well as 51 administrative courts and 15 higher administrative courts across the 16 *Länder*⁴. There are five Federal Courts: the Federal Court of Justice, the Federal Administrative Court, the Federal Finance Court, the Federal Labour Court and the Federal Social Court. Germany has a Federal Constitutional Court, as well as constitutional courts in each of the Länder. The prosecution services in Germany are part of the executive, at federal level with the Prosecutor General at the Federal Court of Justice. At the level of the Länder, each Land has its own public prosecution service. Germany participates in the European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO). There are 27 regional Bars in Germany⁵, which are organised under the umbrella of the German Federal Bar.

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Germany is now high among the general public and remains high among companies. Overall, 72% of the general population and 69% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be 'fairly or very good' in 2024⁶. The perceived judicial independence among the general public has decreased in comparison with 2023 (77%), as well as with 2020 (76%). The perceived

² The principle of merit is anchored in Article 33 para. 2 of the Basic Law; mainly on the basis of the grades in the two legal state exams.

⁴ There are also 18 financial courts, 108 labour courts, 18 higher labour courts, 68 social courts and 14 higher social courts. Ministry of Justice (2020), Courts at federal level and of the Länder.

⁵ There is also a special bar for the lawyers with rights of audience in civil matters at the Federal Court of Justice.

⁶ Figures 51 and 53, 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard and Figures 50 and 52, 2022 EU Justice Scoreboard. The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

judicial independence among companies has decreased in comparison with 2023 (71%), as well as with 2020 (73%)⁷.

Discussions are ongoing about a possible reform to enhance the resilience of the Constitutional Court by including certain safeguards in the Constitution. According to the current legal framework, several key institutional features of the Constitutional Court, such as the binding nature of its judgments, the number of its senates and judges, their term of office and its non-renewability, as well as the election of its judges by a two-thirds majority in Parliament (with each legislative body electing one half of the judges), are regulated only at the level of ordinary law⁸. This means that Parliament can change them by simple majority. In November 2023, the Conference of the Justice Ministers of the Länder decided to set up a working group on ‘resilient rule of law’ (with the participation of the Federal Ministry of Justice) tasked with examining measures to avoid a possible weakening of rule of law safeguards⁹. At the Justice Ministers’ Conference in June 2024, the Länder discussed the working group’s report, which included a draft law to enshrine the above-mentioned elements in the Constitution¹⁰ and require the consent of the Bundesrat to change the Law on the Federal Constitutional Court¹¹. The draft also includes an anti-deadlock mechanism according to which, in a situation where the Bundesrat or Bundestag respectively would not manage to elect a new judge within one year, the other chamber would elect the judge instead¹². In parallel, high-level political talks with representatives of the coalition parties and one parliamentary group of the opposition in the German Bundestag have been ongoing on a possible Constitutional Court reform, with the Federal Ministry of Justice having internally prepared draft constitutional amendments in March 2024, as a basis for further discussion¹³. The Federal President has called for reforms to better protect the Constitutional Court against the presence of extremist parties in Parliament¹⁴. The

¹⁰ Notably the draft law would include in the Constitution the binding nature of the Constitutional Court’s judgments, the number of judges and senates, their election by two-thirds majority, the length of their mandate and incompatibilities with certain political mandates. This means that in the future a two-thirds majority would be required to change these provisions.

¹¹ The Law on the Federal Constitutional Court is a federal law that can be adopted by the Federal Parliament without requiring explicit approval of the Federal Council. ¹² The Venice Commission has noted that the procedure for appointing judges to the Constitutional Court is among the most important and sensitive questions of constitutional adjudication and for the preservation of a credible system of the rule of constitutional law. It underlined the need to ensure both the independence of the judges of the Constitutional Court and to involve different state organs and political forces in the appointment process so that judges are seen as being more than the instrument of one or the other political force. Constitutional Court itself has not taken a position, though its President has noted the importance of a serene, careful and measured debate¹⁵. Stakeholders have broadly expressed support¹⁶ for reform efforts to improve the resilience of the Constitutional Court, which reflect some longer-standing demands on their side¹⁷. At the same time, they note the importance of having a broad, inclusive debate on such a reform, and call for steps to improve safeguards related to appointments beyond the Constitutional Court¹⁸. The report of the working group ‘resilient rule of law’ also takes stock of ongoing reflection processes on improving safeguards for appointments to the Constitutional Courts of the *Länder*¹⁹. In this context, the commitment from the coalition agreement to strengthen safeguards for judicial independence in relation to the system of appointment of Federal court judges²⁰ can be recalled.

The Ministry of Justice has presented a proposal to introduce further safeguards for the use of the power of Ministers of Justice at Federal and Länder level to issue instructions to prosecutors in individual cases. As noted in previous Rule of Law Reports²¹, the coalition agreement had included an intention to reform the ministerial right to instruct prosecutors in individual cases in view of the requirements of the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union²², an issue of long-standing debate in Germany²³. On 2 May 2024, the Ministry of Justice presented draft amendments²⁴ to the Courts Constitution Act to increase the transparency of instructions to the prosecution service. In particular, the draft would explicitly enshrine in law that instructions have to follow the principle of legality²⁵ and, additionally, that they are only permissible to prevent unlawful decisions or in cases where scope for discretion based on factual or legal elements exists. The instructions could not be based on non-judicial considerations. Furthermore, the instructions would need to be issued in writing and be reasoned²⁶. This would be consistent with European standards, which recommend adequate guarantees for transparency and equity such as the instructions being reasoned and in writing²⁷. European standards further recommend seeking prior written advice from the competent public prosecutor and to include the instructions in the case file ahead of the trial²⁸. While the introduction of these additional safeguards has generally been welcomed²⁹, there are calls to further restrict the power to issue instructions, notably a proposal by Nordrhein-Westfalen to limit it strictly to cases of misapplication of the law³⁰, as well as a preference of certain stakeholders to fully remove it³¹.

²³ Certain stakeholders have advocated for fully abolishing the possibility of instructions in individual cases to avoid the appearance of political influence; Contribution from the German Association of Judges for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 12. On the other hand, the Federal Government and the Länder consider that the current system needs to be maintained to comply with the constitutional democracy principle and thereby ensure the accountability of the prosecution service. See 2021 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 3 as well as the explanatory memorandum of the new draft law (see FN 24).

²⁴ Ministry of Justice (2024), Draft law to increase the transparency of instructions to the prosecution service.

²⁵ The principle of legality was already generally applicable as per para. 152 of the German Criminal Procedural Code, but this had not been specifically set out in the Courts Constitution Act, where the power to issue instructions to the prosecution service is regulated.

Measures to further promote the respect of constitutional values by lay judges, and for ordinary judges before their initial appointment, are under consideration in Parliament. As noted in the 2023 Rule of Law Report³², the Ministry of Justice had presented draft legislation providing that the non-respect of constitutional values is a mandatory ground for exclusion from becoming a lay judge. This draft law was submitted to Parliament in August 2023, where it is currently under consideration³³. As regards the introduction of security checks for judges before their initial appointment to confirm their respect of constitutional principles³⁴, the coalition agreement in the Land of Hessen of December 2023 envisages to introduce such checks for judges, prosecutors, and police officers³⁵. In the Land of Brandenburg a law will come into force on 1 September 2024 that allows a regular request at the constitutional protection agency (only non-intelligence resources) for every new official and judge³⁶.

³⁰ The proposal, discussed at the Conference of the Justice Ministers in June 2024, was however not supported by a majority of the other Länder. Nordrhein-Westfalen (2024), Nordrhein-Westfalen demands more independence for prosecution services.

Quality

Some progress has been made to supplement the overall resources for the judiciary through additional investments, while the level of remuneration for judges remains a challenge. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to ‘[s]tep up efforts to ensure adequate resources for the justice system, including on the level of remuneration for judges, taking into account European standards on resources and remuneration for the justice system’³⁷. Germany’s expenditure for the justice system in relation to GDP has remained stable, at a comparatively high level³⁸. Beyond the additional investments by the Federal Government into the digitalisation of justice intended to support the Länder’s strained budgets³⁹, a number of Länder have created additional posts in their justice systems in their budgets for 2023-24, amounting to around 340 new full-time positions for prosecutors and judges cumulatively⁴⁰. However, based on the common personnel needs measurement system of the Länder (PEBB§Y)⁴¹, the association of judges estimates that around 1 500 further posts for prosecutors and judges in criminal matters alone are currently needed⁴² in view of increasing workload and processing times⁴³. . These types of challenges are expected to be

⁴⁰ Additional posts created in 2023 and/or 2024 include: 67.5 in Baden-Württemberg, 150 in Bayern (across all judiciary professions), 38 in Berlin (plus 5 envisaged for 2025), 8 in Brandenburg (though no further increases are expected due to budgetary constraints), 31 in Hamburg (after 2021), 100 in Hessen, 5 in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, 59 in Niedersachsen (2022-24), 40 in Nordrhein-Westfalen, 20 in Rheinland-Pfalz, 23 in Sachsen and 33 in Schleswig-Holstein. However, in Bremen, while a need for around 21 additional posts has been identified, no budgetary means to create them were available. In Sachsen-Anhalt and Thüringen no additional posts were created. Written contribution from the EU Affairs Committee of the Conference of the Justice Ministers in the context of the country visit to Germany. For context, it should be noted that there are currently over 20 000 judges in Germany overall and around 6 500 prosecutors. ⁴¹ PEBB§Y is a mathematical-analytical system to calculate the personnel needs of the Länder based on processing times registered by justice practitioners in an empirical study over a six-month period. The resulting average processing times can be multiplied with the pending and expected incoming cases of courts and prosecutions, to calculate the personnel requirements in each department. It was last updated in 2014 completely. On specific occasions, the commission of the state justice administrations for issues relating to the calculation of personnel requirements and its state working groups review whether adjustments to the basic figures or the product structure are necessary due to changes (an update of the calculation is planned for 2027). PEBB§Y figures are unrelated from the question of how many positions are currently vacant. Report – PEBB§Y update 2014.

further exacerbated by upcoming waves of retirements until 2030⁴⁴. In June 2024, the Länder decided to develop a joint ‘rule of law campaign’ to improve the recruitment of future talent in the judiciary⁴⁵. Stakeholders have also noted challenges as regards the recruitment of court staff, especially IT experts for the implementation of the on-going digitalisation initiatives⁴⁶. As for the remuneration of judges, almost all Länder as well as the Federal Government, will apply to the judiciary the most recent collective bargaining agreement for the public sector⁴⁷, which provides for lump sum payments to compensate for inflation, and salary increases as of February 2025 at the latest⁴⁸. However, the annual salaries of judges at the beginning of their career have remained the lowest in the EU compared to the average wages overall⁴⁹. Judges’ representatives continue to criticise this situation, which has led to open letters and protests by judges in certain *Länder*⁵⁰. The criticism has highlighted the challenges for the ability of the judiciary to recruit qualified candidates, given the salaries in the private sector⁵¹. The Constitutional Court has repeatedly issued judgments interpreting the requirement of adequate remuneration of civil servants emanating from the Constitution⁵², and further cases are expected to be decided in 2024⁵³. Regional disparities between the different Länder as regards entry-level salaries for judges also remain significant, differing by up to 15%⁵⁴. According to European standards, judges’ remuneration should be commensurate with their profession and responsibilities and be sufficient to shield them from inducements aimed at influencing their decisions⁵⁵. Overall, since resources have seen some increase, while challenges regarding the salaries of judges remain, some progress has been made on the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

Digitalisation efforts in the judiciary are underpinned by a multi-annual investment programme and a number of dedicated legislative initiatives. The level of digitalisation of justice in Germany is overall very good, notably with regard to the use of digital technology and electronic communication tools by courts and prosecution⁵⁶, or arrangements for machine readable judgments⁵⁷. Procedural rules allowing digital technology in courts in civil, commercial, and administrative cases are in place. With regard to criminal cases⁵⁸ some gaps remain for digital solutions to conduct and follow court proceedings⁵⁹. A digitalisation initiative for the justice system includes funding of up to EUR 200 million for the period from 2023 to 2026⁶⁰. In 2023, the funding of twelve projects of the Federal Government and the Länder amounting to EUR 112 million for 2023-2026 was approved and implemented, and additional projects are being prepared⁶¹. Furthermore, in November 2023, the Federal Government and the Länder agreed that the digitalisation of justice must go hand in hand with a modernisation of the procedural rules. To this end, they decided to convene a joint reform commission to draw up proposals for the civil procedure of the future, which should commence its work in July 2024⁶². In addition, in March 2024, the Government submitted to Parliament a legislative proposal to further digitalise the judiciary. The proposal includes a simplification of the electronic submission of certain motions for lawyers and parties, more flexible solutions for the transition to fully electronic court files as of 2026,⁶³ and the possibility for parties to participate in the main appeal hearing via videoconference in criminal matters before the Federal Court of Justice⁶⁴. As noted in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Federal Government had, in May 2023, submitted a proposal to further expand the possibility of videoconferencing in civil and specialised courts to the Federal Council, which was subsequently adopted on 14 June 2024⁶⁵. Furthermore, in March 2024, the ⁶⁰ The budget of the Federal Ministry of Justice has a dedicated and separate title for this purpose, which has been allocated EUR 50 million per year for the relevant period. All supported projects must comply with the ‘one for all’ principle, namely projects must be designed in such a way that it can be extended to and used by all Länder as well as the Federal Government.

Parliament adopted a law on the introduction of electronic submission of documents and the use of electronic files at the Federal Constitutional Court⁶⁶.

Discussions on the proposal to introduce digital documentation of main proceedings in criminal cases have stalled due to diverging views between the Federal Government and the Länder. As noted in the 2023 Rule of Law Report⁶⁷, the Government's proposal to introduce digital documentation through audio recordings⁶⁸ of main proceedings in criminal cases had been submitted to Parliament in May 2023⁶⁹. While the Federal Parliament adopted the proposal on 17 November 2023, the Federal Council, representing the Länder, did not find a majority in support and called on the conciliation committee to find a compromise⁷⁰. The Länder have raised issues with the proposal, related to the timeline, costs, and content of the proposal. They highlighted a potential impact on the willingness of victims and accused persons to testify and a possible risk of leaks of the recordings⁷¹. The Federal Government considers that introducing digital documentation will ensure a reliable, objective, and uniform tool to support the work of all parties to the proceedings⁷². Stakeholders remain split on the proposal, with the Judges' Association sharing the Länder's concerns as regards the impact of the digital documentation on criminal proceedings⁷³. The Bar and associations of lawyers have welcomed the proposal, which they consider will improve the traceability and transparency of proceedings, also in the interest of witnesses, noting that similar solutions are common in other European countries⁷⁴. Discussions in the conciliation committee initially scheduled for February 2024 have been postponed⁷⁵.

Several legislative proposals aim at increasing the attractiveness of Germany as a location for civil and commercial cases. To follow-up on the 2023 study by the Ministry of Justice⁷⁶ examining the significant decline in incoming civil cases between 2005 and 2019, Germany has presented several initiatives to address this phenomenon. ⁶⁸ The audio recording would then be transformed into a written protocol through a transcription software. Currently, for criminal proceedings at regional and higher regional courts, only a formal protocol is prepared, noting the procedural steps but not the content or interventions, meaning that judges, prosecutors and lawyers each take their own notes. The proposal also foresees an optional possibility to introduce video recordings, at the discretion of the Länder.

Parliament adopted a proposal to create ‘commercial courts’, with the aim to make the German justice system more attractive for large and international commercial disputes⁷⁷. These commercial courts will take the form of specialised senates that the Länder can create at a higher regional court to hear first instance commercial cases above a dispute value of EUR 500 000, with the possibility to conduct proceedings in English⁷⁸. This proposal aims to address long-standing calls by the *Länder*⁷⁹. The Federal Council has generally welcomed the proposal but criticised the limitation to certain areas of law and to disputes involving companies⁸⁰. Stakeholders⁸¹ have also expressed overall support, though business representatives⁸² have questioned the high threshold for the dispute value. With a similar objective of increasing the attractiveness of Germany as a location for arbitration, on 26 June 2024 the Government submitted a proposal for the modernisation of arbitration law to Parliament⁸³. The proposal foresees inter alia the possibility to conduct arbitration-related court proceedings in English, enhanced digitalisation of arbitration proceedings and the possibility to publish the decisions, with agreement of the parties. Finally, a legislative proposal submitted to Parliament on 5 June 2024 foresees further measures as regards civil proceedings, notably strengthening local courts by increasing the dispute value threshold for cases that can be heard at their level⁸⁴ and clarifying the division of competences between local and regional courts to improve specialisation⁸⁵.

Efficiency

The justice system overall continues to perform efficiently and measures to deal with so-called ‘mass’ civil cases⁸⁶ are being negotiated. The number of incoming civil and commercial litigious cases has continued a declining trend from the past years (1.2 cases at first instance per 100 000 inhabitants in 2022 compared to 1.3 in 2021)⁸⁷. The disposition time in administrative cases at first instance continued to decrease (from 422 days in 2021 to

⁸⁵ In civil cases, the local court or regional court are responsible as the court of first instance, depending on the nature of the case. The draft foresees that regardless of the dispute value, certain cases such as some neighbour-related disputes are always handled by local courts, while others such as procurement matters are always handled by the regional courts. The decline in civil cases is an issue in particular for courts in smaller locations, as they are unable to compensate for the decline in the number of cases by reducing the number of posts and therefore run the risk of having to close completely. Ministry of Justice (2024) Draft legislative proposal on amending the jurisdictional value in dispute of the local courts, to expand the specialisation of the judiciary in civil matters and to amend other procedural regulations.

⁸⁶ These are usually a large number of individual lawsuits, giving rise to the same key legal issues and asserting similar claims, such as following the so-called Dieseltgate scandal or relating to consumer disputes in insurance or bank contracts.

408 days in 2022)⁸⁸ and slightly increased for litigious civil and commercial cases at first instance (from 231 days in 2021 to 241 days in 2022)⁸⁹. At the same time, the number of pending litigious civil and commercial cases as well as administrative cases at first instance decreased⁹⁰. However, the phenomenon of ‘mass’ civil court cases continues to pose serious challenges for the justice system. In June 2023, the Ministry of Justice presented a draft legislative proposal on a ‘leading decision’ procedure to the Federal Court of Justice, aimed at dealing with some of those cases more efficiently⁹¹, which was then submitted to Parliament in August 2023. However, in October 2023, the Federal Council expressed reservations⁹² on certain elements of the proposal.

II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

Germany has several authorities responsible for the prevention of corruption at the federal level, including the Federal Ministry of the Interior and Community, and the Supreme Audit Institution. Competences for the policy coordination and corruption prevention in the 16 Ministries of the Interior at the Länder level depend on the anti-corruption frameworks in place. The Federal Court of Auditors⁹³ and the Courts of Auditors at the Länder level have a preventive role in monitoring the public spending, including controls of corruption. As to the repression of corruption, Germany has a decentralised approach. The sixteen Länder are in charge of the investigation and prosecution of corruption offences across Germany. Some Länder have specialised police and prosecution offices on corruption in place. The Federal Criminal Police Office plays a role in the information-exchange between the international level and the local level as well as among police offices at the Länder level.

The perception among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains relatively low. In the 2023 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Germany scores 78/100 and ranks 5th in the European Union and 9th globally⁹⁴. This perception has been relatively stable over the past five years.⁹⁵ The 2024

⁹⁰ Figures 13 and 14, 2024 EU Justice Scoreboard.

⁹² The Federal Council considers it problematic that a legal dispute must proceed through the lower instances until it reaches the Federal Supreme Court. Instead, it considers that it should be possible to submit the relevant legal issues to the Federal Court of Justice already at the first instance. Furthermore, it believes that an overall concept for dealing with mass proceedings is necessary, which should also include, for example, a possible concentration of the taking of evidence.

⁹³ There is also a role for the Federal Court of Auditors to assess the implementation of the Federal Government Corruption Prevention Directive. It can provide recommendations for corruption risks and for corruption prevention.

Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 51% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 68%) and 11% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 27%)⁹⁶. As regards businesses, 47% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 65%) and 20% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 36%)⁹⁷. Furthermore, 32% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 32%)⁹⁸, while 40% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 31%)⁹⁹.

The update of Germany’s strategic anti-corruption framework at the Federal level and revision of its rules on gifts has remained pending. The revision of the 2003 ‘Federal Government Directive Concerning the Prevention of Corruption in the Federal Administration’ led by the Ministry of Interior, as the federal administration’s corruption prevention strategy¹⁰⁰, was originally expected to be finalised by the end of 2022¹⁰¹, but has seen several delays since 2021. The revision of the Directive is currently planned to be finalised after the adoption of the proposed EU directive on combating corruption through criminal law, which is not expected before next year¹⁰². Consequently, input from stakeholders has not yet been sought¹⁰³. The revision of the 2004 rules on the prohibition to accept favours and gifts is also still ongoing.¹⁰⁴ but planned to be finalised still in 2024¹⁰⁵. Germany has further strengthened its criminal law relating to corruption, while plans on corporate sanctions for foreign bribery have not yet advanced further. While bribery in the public and private sector, including members of Parliament is already broadly criminalised in Germany, a new law was adopted by the Parliament in May 2024 and came into force in June 2024¹⁰⁷. This law introduces as a new provision the criminal offence of trading in influence involving members of Parliament¹⁰⁸. Notably, the new provision criminalises illicit peddling of actual or alleged influence by members of Parliament, and thus unethically commercial conduct¹⁰⁹ by exerting influence outside of their official parliamentary activities. As such, the newly introduced provision complements already existing provisions on members of Parliaments, closing a criminal liability gap¹¹⁰. The regulation of parliamentarians' secondary activities leaves room for concern¹¹¹. As to previously reported plans to strengthen sanctions for companies for foreign bribery, there is still no concrete timeline for the Minister of Justice's plan to provide for precisions in the Code of Administrative Offences¹¹², which would include an adaptation of the level of sanctions for legal persons, but changes are still planned for 2025. Increased corporate liability¹¹³ for criminal offences could further facilitate enforcement levels in criminal prosecutions of foreign bribery¹¹⁴.

Germany overall provides an effective response in its fight against corruption. As in previous years, no concerns were raised by stakeholders identifying any systemic weaknesses in the treatment of high-level corruption cases or the investigation, prosecution or final judgement of corruption and high-level corruption cases¹¹⁵. No corruption cases or challenges in the cooperation between the German authorities and the EPPO on corruption-related investigations have been reported¹¹⁶. The levels of human and financial resources as well as high specialisation specifically for corruption cases within the police, the financial intelligence unit, the prosecution service, and courts are found to be overall sufficient to carry out their tasks effectively¹¹⁷. The FIU is reported to work on enhancing its operational effectiveness regarding its practice and backlogs¹¹⁸. To facilitate cooperation between the Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU) and law enforcement, including on corruption as a predicate offence, amendments to the money laundering law came into force on 18 November 2023¹¹⁹. The 2023 Situation Report by the Federal Criminal Police illustrates in a robust annual analysis recent trends, developments and statistics on corruption and Germany's efforts to repress it¹²⁰. It details 3 600 police-registered corruption cases for 2022, which presents a stark decrease of approximately 51% compared to 2021¹²¹. According to this Situation Report, the decrease can be observed across the board for almost all corruption-related crimes¹²². It is reportedly due to the complexity of corruption investigations and the fact that a few large-scale investigations in several Länder conducted in the previous year involved a high number of individual criminal acts. Medical and pharmaceutical industries are identified as the most affected sectors by corruption-related crimes, while the business sector and public administration represent the preferred targets. Also, law enforcement and justice authorities are reported to increase as a target for corruption-related crimes¹²³.

Overall, the number of identified public officials accepting a bribe continue to be at the lowest level of the past five years. The detected financial damage caused by corruption has notably decreased compared to 2021, by approximately 56% amounting to EUR 27 million in 2022. Of those who have been found to have accepted a bribe, 51% have been public officials, a decrease of four percentage points compared to 2021.

Stricter rules for Germany’s lobbying register came into force. With more than 6 000 interest representative entries by the end of 2023, the lobby register is further expanding¹²⁴. On 1 March 2024, the reform of the Lobby Register Act entered into force¹²⁵, further elevating the levels of transparency in Germany’s decision-making process. The mandatory lobby register administered by the Federal Parliament now provides for a broader scope of those considered potential lobby targets in the public administration¹²⁶ and more extensive publication requirements for lobbyists. These include the requirement to publish the lobby organisation’s financial sources, interest representatives’ previous roles as public or elected officials (revolving doors)¹²⁷, lobbying activities on behalf of third parties, the specific legislation lobbied, and the range of potential lobby targets envisaged¹²⁸. Stakeholders view this initiative largely positively providing for more transparency in Germany’s environment of strong industry interest representation¹²⁹. Until 30 June 2024, all interest representatives will have to update their entries¹³⁰. The Parliament Administration is monitoring all entries and verifying and following up on suspicious data content in the register¹³¹, while also increasingly taking third parties’ compliance monitoring into account. In the reporting period, the first administrative proceeding was opened against a lobby group for failure to register while lobbying a minister¹³². As sanction, this can lead to an administrative fine of up to EUR 50 000. There are plans to interconnect the lobby register with a future digital legislative portal to enhance transparency in decision-making further, so far without an indicative timeline¹³³.

¹²⁸ Input from Germany for the 2024 Rule of Law report, p. 21. Interest representatives must also state all current, planned, or intended regulatory proposals at federal level or European Union level, for which lobbying is to be carried out. Also written comments and expert opinions submitted to lobby targets that contain material arguments or positions concerning these specific regulatory proposals have to be provided in PDF format and their content also in machine-readable format, even if these contributions are not mentioned in the executive footprint (for more details, see next section). See also GRECO (2024), Fourth Evaluation Round - Addendum to the Second Compliance Report on Germany, recommendation (i), paras. 9-16, pp. 3-4. In detail, GRECO recommended that ‘the transparency of the parliamentary process be further improved, e.g. by introducing rules for members of parliament on how to interact with lobbyists and other third parties seeking to influence the parliamentary process.’

Some further progress was made regarding the introduction of a legislative footprint to increase transparency in decision-making. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to ‘proceed with plans to introduce a “legislative footprint” to allow for the monitoring and tracing of all interest representatives who seek to influence and contribute to specific legislative texts’¹³⁴. On 6 March 2024, the Federal Government revised its Rules of Procedure introducing a legislative footprint¹³⁵ for the executive, from where the majority of legislative proposals originate¹³⁶. As of June 2024, officials in Federal Ministries¹³⁷ are required to disclose the influence of lobbyists on legislative drafts. Although largely welcomed by stakeholders, the changes do not yet encompass reporting obligations on meetings in person with lobbyists nor the disclosure of those written contributions which have ultimately not been taken into account by the Government¹³⁸. Only lobbying input that contributed to a significant extent or led to changes of core aspects of the legislative draft fall under the disclosure obligation, providing for a wide discretion¹³⁹. The introduction of a ‘legislative footprint’ for the Parliament and of a joint digital legislative portal for Government and Parliament continue to be delayed¹⁴⁰. The larger e-legislation initiative remains at a conceptual stage with results envisaged by the end of 2025¹⁴¹. Against this background, some progress has been made on the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

Some further progress has been made on stricter post-employment regulations for high-level officials with new rules having entered into force and higher transparency standards. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended Germany to ‘[s]trengthen the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing consistency of the different applicable rules, the transparency of authorisations for future employment of high-ranking public officials, and the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries’¹⁴². The stricter rules recently introduced for the lobbying register include a new requirement to disclose interest representatives’ current or previous roles as public and elected officials¹⁴³, which stakeholders largely welcomed¹⁴⁴. As of 1 April 2024, ¹³⁴ 2022 and 2023 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 2. The 2023 Rule of Law Report concluded that ‘some progress’ had been made on the 2022 recommendation.

¹³⁵ A legislative footprint is a comprehensive public record of lobbyists’ influence on a piece of legislation.

See also Ministry of Interior (6 March 2024), Press statement, executive footprint: federal legislation becomes more transparent and easier to understand. Approximately 80-90% of the legislative drafts are prepared by the Government.

¹³⁹ There is an obligation, however, to provide lobbying input in the lobbying register, see section above.

¹⁴⁰ As previously reported the introduction of this legislative footprint was expected by the end of 2024, see 2023 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 16.

amendments¹⁴⁵ entered into force, introducing a tiered system of declaration and authorisation obligations for former high-ranking public officials, including political officials and those who had received a security-vetting before their retirement¹⁴⁶. Instead of only covering activities linked to their role in the past five years in service, the obligation extends now to all post-employment activities and to a period of seven years following their service¹⁴⁷. Subsequent employment will not be authorised if the new activity impairs the interests of the public administration¹⁴⁸. Failure to comply with the prohibition of subsequent employment is considered a disciplinary offence¹⁴⁹. Varying cooling-off periods¹⁵⁰ persist¹⁵¹. Therefore, some further progress has been made on the recommendation made in the previous years.

The monitoring of secondary activities of members of Parliament continues to constitute a challenge. Certain prohibitions are in place for remunerated lobby activities of members of Parliament¹⁵² but there is no requirement to disclose the actual time spent on them¹⁵³ nor is there a requirement for ad-hoc disclosures in plenary debates when a conflict between specific private interests emerges in relation to a matter under discussion in Parliament¹⁵⁴. Several recent cases of non-compliance by members of the Parliament have been reported in the reporting period and were addressed afterwards¹⁵⁵. Questions remain however as to

¹⁴⁵ As regards Section 105 of the Law on Federal Public Officials

¹⁴⁷ New employment needs to be declared one month ahead of the start of the new activity. In case of failure to comply, there is a possibility to prohibit for a period of one month the start of the new activity.

¹⁴⁹ See Section 77(2) Civil Service Act. The prosecution of the offences is based on the Federal Disciplinary Act.

¹⁵⁰ For federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries, the cooling-off periods are shorter with a 12-18 month-period, compared to the period applicable to state secretaries and directors general of three to five years and thus could warrant a longer mandatory cooling-off period, as also recommended by GRECO Fifth Evaluation Round – Evaluation Report, para. 89. Federal ministers and parliamentary state secretaries hold their offices for a shorter period of time. In this context, stakeholders, including LobbyControl and Transparency International, call for a three-year cooling-off period to better prevent and reduce risks of undue influence, see for instance Lobbycontrol, Lobbypedia – Cooling-off Period.

systematic oversight and enforcement, which remain an obstacle in practice¹⁵⁶. No information is available or has been reported regarding the application of the existing sanctions in practice during the reporting period, such as by the issuance of fines. Given the Parliament Administration's limited mandate to investigate and subordination to the Presidium of the Parliament, stakeholders continue to remark as in previous years the lack of a fully independent oversight body or ethics committee with a mandate to investigate breaches¹⁵⁷.

Weaknesses remain in conflict of interest and asset disclosure rules and their enforcement in practice. In relation to top executives, there have been no developments to strengthen oversight and to increase transparency over financial and business interests of federal ministers, parliamentary state secretaries, state secretaries and directors general to disclose potential conflicts of interest, as had been recommended by GRECO¹⁵⁸. Several cases of conflict of interests have raised public attention, leading to calls to modernise the rules in place for public officials¹⁵⁹. The Legal Commission of the Federal Parliament's Council of Elders is drafting an evaluation report on interest and asset disclosure rules for member of the Federal Parliament¹⁶⁰. Their financial declarations do not extend to liabilities and significant assets, such as shareholdings in private enterprises below the current threshold¹⁶¹. Their assets and financial interests are only subject to notification if the respective member is in charge of an issue in a parliamentary committee, while being remunerated through a secondary activity¹⁶².

New rules have been adopted increasing political party and campaign financing transparency. On 14 December 2023, the Parliament passed amendments to the law increasing the ceiling of state subsidies for political parties as well as the level of transparency in party finance¹⁶³. This comes partly in response to a Constitutional Court ruling in January 2023¹⁶⁴. The amendments further provide new rules regulating party sponsoring and hidden party campaign finance by other persons at federal and Länder level, increasing overall transparency in party financing¹⁶⁵. Stakeholders consider the legislative reform as promising, although they noted a lack of a maximum ceiling for party and campaign donations, which risks affecting the level playing field, since large-scale companies would have proportionally higher influence possibilities¹⁶⁶. In practice, four administrative lawyers are competent, including the head of the party finance division of the Parliament Administration for the general control of potential infringements and administrative offences, including on party and campaign finance¹⁶⁷. The Parliament Administration also does not have access to donors' tax information to be able to cross-check data during the verification process of statements of accounts of political parties¹⁶⁸. Stakeholders continue to regard this lack of investigative powers and limited human resources as problematic to ensure effective responses in practice¹⁶⁹, proposing the establishment of an independent control body¹⁷⁰. A further concern in practice relates to the continuing significant time lapse between the actual party income and its reporting¹⁷¹.

New legislation on whistleblower protection has entered into force. A new law for enhanced protection of whistleblowers entered into force on 2 July 2023, aiming to transpose the EU Whistleblower Directive. The material scope of the German law is wider than that of the Whistleblower Directive since it also encompasses, among others, breaches related to all ¹⁶⁴ For unscheduled, additional increases there are strict regulations in place, which the Constitutional Court confirmed in its ruling of 24 January 2023, 2 BvF 2/18.

¹⁶⁵ The threshold for donation reporting requirements was lowered from EUR 50 000 to EUR 35 000. Party sponsorship must now be disclosed in annual reports. Campaigning by other persons, e.g. through advertisements, is considered a donation after notification and no distancing by the party.

LobbyControl (7 November 2023), Party financing: coalition and CDU agree, but a party donation cap is missing. ¹⁶⁷ The Parliament Administrations' human resources were further increased in 2023 in support of its oversight and monitoring functions. In 2022-2023, the human resources increased from 4 to 10 staff members, of which 9 are permanent positions for the control of lobby register. However, this staff increase is primarily meant to enhance oversight over the lobby register, not political party, and campaign finance. types of corruption crimes without the need of a link to the EU budget¹⁷². Several internal reporting structures exist at the Federal Government level, including in anti-corruption units¹⁷³. The central external reporting channel for public and private sector matters concerning the Federal and the Länder level is administered by the Federal Office for Justice¹⁷⁴. Stakeholders consider the new legal framework essential to supporting whistleblower reports to uncover large-scale corruption, economic crimes, and other wrongdoings¹⁷⁵, noting however that the Länder are still in the process of setting-up internal reporting channels with varying degrees of readiness so far¹⁷⁶. According to federal police statistics, in 2023, 63.5% of corruption investigations were initiated on the basis of external information and public disclosures¹⁷⁷.

Proposals to modernise public procurement rules are still under preparation. Businesses' attitudes towards corruption in the EU show that 17% of companies in Germany (EU average 27%) think that corruption has prevented them from winning a public tender or a public procurement contract in practice in the last three years¹⁷⁸. The legislative package to simplify, digitalise and speed up public procurement procedures is still planned to be submitted to Parliament in 2024¹⁷⁹. The initiative, which is part of the Government's coalition agreement, was overall welcomed by stakeholders as having the potential to increase transparency and thus prevent corruption in public contracting¹⁸⁰.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

In Germany, the Basic Law, complemented by the relevant jurisprudence of the Constitutional Court and secondary legislation form a well-established legal framework, guaranteeing media freedom and pluralism as well as the right of access to information. The main legislative competence in the area lies with the Länder, which conclude state treaties to establish a common media policy framework, including notably the State Media Treaty¹⁸¹. The federal structure results in a variety of legal frameworks, supervisory structures and public service broadcasters providing an additional safeguard for media pluralism and media freedom¹⁸².

¹⁷⁴ According to input from Germany for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 23, in the period since enforcement on 2 July 2023 until 30 November 2023, of the 309 disclosure reports received by the Federal Office for Justice, 19 proceedings have already been dealt with, while 23 cases have been transferred to other competent authorities. Whistleblowers have the option to report either to internal or external reporting channels, while going public must be last resort, unless there is an imminent danger or risk of losing evidence.

The framework regulating the state media authorities and media ownership transparency has remained stable; in addition, reflections on revising the media concentration framework are ongoing. The independence of the 14 State media authorities functioning as regulatory authorities for commercial broadcasters at the Länder level remains guaranteed¹⁸³. As regards transparency of media ownership, obligations are in place for commercial broadcasters, online news media and the press¹⁸⁴. As reported previously¹⁸⁵, access to ownership information covering television, radio, press, and online media is ensured via a public database of the Commission on Concentration in the Media (KEK)¹⁸⁶. Since the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Länder continued their deliberations on a revision of the media concentration framework, including by holding a stakeholder consultation on the matter¹⁸⁷. The allocation of state advertising is not considered to be a problematic issue in Germany¹⁸⁸.

The self-regulation of the press by the German Press Council continues to be well established, with an increase of reprimands issued in 2023. The Press Council, gathering the main journalists' and publishers' associations, continues to be a well-accepted actor in the German media landscape for print and increasingly also online media¹⁸⁹. In 2023, the number of complaints on press publications received by the Press Council increased slightly (1 850 complaints received in 2023, compared to 1 733 in 2022 and a peak of 4 085 complaints in 2020, linked to the COVID-19 pandemic)¹⁹⁰. At the same time, the number of non-binding public reprimands issued by the Press Council increased from 47 in 2022 to 73 in 2023, of which more than 80% have been published. 60% of these reprimands related to either violations in relation to journalistic due diligence or violations of the protection of privacy as defined in the Press Code¹⁹¹.

Stronger compliance safeguards for public service broadcasters were agreed in 2023, with a proposal for further reform of the system set to be presented in autumn 2024. The independence of the public service broadcasters remains ensured. The 4th amendment to the State Media Treaty entered into force at the beginning of 2024 and aims at further strengthening the independent supervisory committees of the public service broadcasters and improving mechanisms for compliance, transparency, and the prevention of conflicts of interest¹⁹². The revision follows the 2022 scandal relating to allegations of mismanagement concerning the public service broadcaster for Berlin and Brandenburg (RBB)¹⁹³. As regards financing, based on the financial needs declared by the public service broadcasters, the Commission for the determination of the financial needs of public service broadcasters (KEF) recommended in February 2024 to raise the monthly licence fee for the public service broadcasters by 3.2% to EUR 18.94 from 2025 onwards¹⁹⁴. As part of the third stage of the procedure provided by law for setting the broadcasting fee, there are statements in several Länder which argue for maintaining the fee at the current level¹⁹⁵. The margin to deviate from the KEF's recommendation is limited due to the jurisprudence of the Federal Constitutional Court¹⁹⁶. Furthermore, there is an on-going reform discussion between the Länder on possible changes to the public service broadcasting system. The recommendations of a Board of independent experts commissioned by the Broadcasting Commission of the Länder on the future of public service broadcasting serve as an impetus for the reform discussion¹⁹⁷. For further discussions, the Broadcasting Commission of the Länder also requested an evaluation conducted by the KEF on the potential financial impact of possible reforms concerning the scope of remit and structures of public service broadcasters¹⁹⁸. The Länder are aiming to present a reform of the provisions concerning the public service broadcasters by autumn 2024¹⁹⁹.

While the Federal Government intends to present in 2024 a proposal to establish in law the right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, no further progress has been made so far. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to ‘advance with the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to official document’²⁰⁰, which was part of the coalition agreement of the Federal Government in 2021²⁰¹. While the right of the press to access information is guaranteed at regional level in the press laws of all Länder and at national level based on the Constitution, stakeholders continue to highlight gaps in the legal framework regarding the access to information from federal authorities²⁰². This is also supported by the Federal Commissioner for Data Protection and Freedom of Information and the Conference of the Commissioners for Freedom of Information of the Länder, who are calling for a federal press law providing journalists with a right to access information and are also calling for a more uniform approach at the level of the *Länder*²⁰³. As also noted in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Federal Government maintains its plan to establish in law a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities and has indicated that it intends to present a legislative proposal in 2024²⁰⁴. As no concrete information is available on the preparations of this legislative proposal, no further progress has been made on the recommendation made in the 2023 Rule of Law Report.

Authorities and journalists cooperate to address risks to the safety of journalists, in view of concerns related to an increasingly hostile perception in society of journalists and media, manifesting itself in hate speech and violence. Since July 2023, the Council of Europe Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists registered six alerts concerning Germany²⁰⁵. The Mapping Media Freedom project recorded 92 alerts related to media freedom in Germany in 2023 (compared to 87 alerts in 2022 and 119 in 2021)²⁰⁶. Preliminary police statistics for 2023 indicate a total of 290 registered criminal offences in the broad target category ‘media’, showing a slight decrease (compared to 320 in 2022 and 276 cases in 2021)²⁰⁷. Protests continue to be a focal point for violent incidents against journalists²⁰⁸. Journalists and media representatives report that journalists are increasingly the subject of hate speech and physical attacks²⁰⁹. Reporters Without Borders notes that the situation of press freedom in Germany has not fundamentally changed compared to the previous year. As a result of the sharp decline in anti-COVID measures and right-wing extremist demonstrations, the number of physical attacks against media workers decreased in 2023 with 41 attacks compared to 103 in 2022²¹⁰. Among the actions targeting media outlets, there have also been blockades against print and distribution centres of press outlets and protests in front of media offices²¹¹. Reports suggest that police authorities generally react appropriately to attacks against journalists²¹². There continue to be efforts by the authorities to address issues related to aggression against journalists, including for example training for police officers²¹³. The long-discussed update of the existing principles on conduct for the media and the police could potentially be agreed in 2024²¹⁴. Media representatives highlight that the increased risk of physical attacks may impact journalistic reporting, in particular of smaller media outlets at local level that might be unable to send out a sufficiently strong team to cover an event with an increased risk²¹⁵. The 2024 Media Pluralism Monitor continues to show an overall low risk for its indicator on the journalistic profession, standards, and protection, but underlines increasing concerns related in particular to attacks on journalists²¹⁶.

While the professional environment for journalists remains good, stakeholders see room for further improvement by abolishing the prohibition of verbatim publication of official documents in criminal proceedings. Strategic lawsuits against public participation targeting journalists are generally not a concern in the German media environment. However, some civil society organisations continue to flag that there are some cases of abusive legal measures targeting journalists intended to deter them from reporting²¹⁷, which may in particular intimidate smaller outlets or freelance journalists. A broad coalition of civil society and journalist associations is also calling for changes to the Criminal Code prohibiting the verbatim publication of official documents in criminal proceedings before they have been discussed in a public hearing or the proceedings have been concluded, arguing that this prohibition could restrict reporting and constitutes an unjustified limitation on the freedom of the press, raising questions as regards its constitutionality and compatibility with the European Convention of Human Rights²¹⁸.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Germany is a federal republic, with powers distributed between the federal and the sixteen state Governments. The separation of powers is enshrined in the Basic Law²¹⁹ and the constitutions of the Länder. At the federal level, federal legislative power is vested in the

This is also illustrated by an on-going case against the editor-in-chief of the NGO FragDen Staat, in which the defendant, supported by FragDenStaat and the Gesellschaft für Freiheitsrechte, has applied for a stay of proceedings to submit §353d of the Criminal Code to the Constitutional Court to review its constitutionality (Society for Civil Rights (1 December 2023), Letter to the Public Prosecutor's Office of Berlin).

²¹⁹ Art. 20. Basic Law.

Federal Parliament (Bundestag) and the representative body of the Länder (Bundesrat)²²⁰. The Government, the Bundesrat or members of the Bundestag can submit legislative proposals²²¹. Constitutional review is ensured by the Federal Constitutional Court and the constitutional courts of the Länder. The German Human Rights Institute, which is the national human rights institution, and the Federal Anti-Discrimination Agency, which functions as the equality body, contribute to upholding fundamental rights.

Timeframes for stakeholder consultations at federal level vary in practice while the commitment to create a single portal for all legislative proposals remains outstanding.

The joint rules of procedure of the Federal Ministries recommend a consultation period on legislative drafts of four weeks²²². However, stakeholders report that consultation periods continue to vary in practice and are often significantly shorter than the recommended four weeks, with a number of important and complex initiatives being submitted to consultation for only a few days or even hours²²³. No concrete steps have been taken so far to follow-up on the commitment in the coalition agreement to create single portal for all legislative proposals²²⁴, meaning that legislative drafts are published across individual Ministries' websites and there is no information provided about consultation procedures in a centralised manner²²⁵. As regards the legislative process in Parliament, on 5 July 2023 the Constitutional Court granted an emergency injunction requested by an opposition party to prevent the adoption of a specific law within the on-going parliamentary week, which had been substantially amended in the parliamentary process, with only a week foreseen between these changes and adoption. The Court found that the potential for the violation of the right to equal participation to the decision-making process as a member of Parliament was not manifestly unfounded, in particular concerning the envisaged timing of the second and third reading²²⁶. A decision in the main proceedings is pending.

On 1 January 2024, Germany had 10 leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, a decrease of two compared to the previous year²²⁷. At that time, Germany's rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remained pending was at 33% (compared to 43% in 2023) and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 4 years (compared to 4 years and 2 months in 2023)²²⁸. The oldest leading judgment, pending implementation for 7 years, concerns the lack of compensation for the adverse effects of partial expropriation of a property²²⁹. As regards the respect of payment deadlines, on 31 December 2023 there was 1 case in total awaiting confirmation of payments (compared to none in 2022)²³⁰. On 1 July 2024, the number of leading judgments pending implementation had increased to 11²³¹.

The German Institute of Human Rights was re-accredited with A-status in October 2023. As part of the reaccreditation, the Subcommittee on accreditation (SCA) of the Global Alliance of Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI)²³² encouraged the German Institute for Human Rights to continue advocating for strengthening its protection mandate²³³, to make the two rapporteur mechanisms on trafficking in human beings and on gender-based violence permanent, and to strengthen and seek a formalisation of its engagement with the Federal Parliament including participation in Parliamentary hearings²³⁴. Furthermore, the SCA encouraged the Institute to continue calling for changes in its governance structure with regards to political representatives on the Board of Trustees²³⁵ and the term of office of the Board of Directors²³⁶. As noted in the 2023 Rule of Law Report, the Institute does not yet have a horizontal mechanism to monitor implementation of its recommendations by the public authorities; it is looking into developing this in the future although it has not experienced issues in this respect²³⁷. The Institute considers its financial and human resources adequate to allow it to carry out its tasks²³⁸.

There has been no progress yet to address the uncertainty regarding the tax-exempt status of non-profit organisations and practical concerns resulting from this persist. The 2023 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to ‘take forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations’²³⁹. The Government has repeated its general commitment to present a reform in the course of 2024 and has set-up an inter-ministerial working group to discuss new regulations²⁴⁰, which it intends to still apply in 2024. However, no concrete steps have been taken at this stage. In the meantime, civil society organisations (CSOs) continue to experience negative consequences of the uncertainty related to their tax status²⁴¹ when engaging in ‘political activity’, even if this activity is only of occasional nature²⁴². The fear of loss of tax-exempt status as well as very lengthy processing times for a decision by the tax authorities²⁴³ can have a chilling effect on CSOs’ willingness to participate in public debate²⁴⁴. This has become especially salient in 2023 and 2024 in relation to the question as to whether non-profit organisations may call for participation in or organise protests in defence of democratic values²⁴⁵. A lack of or loss of the tax-exempt status can have negative financial impacts as regards donations²⁴⁶ and access to other public sources for funding, for which it is often a pre-condition²⁴⁷. A letter was sent by over 100 CSOs to the Government on 18 June 2024, reiterating these concerns and the urgent need for

However, in practice this situation leaves significant discretion to individual tax authorities. Contribution from Gesellschaft für Freiheitsrechte as part of Civil Liberties Europe for the 2024 Rule of Law Report, p. 21.

The overall situation of civic space has seen some deterioration, with certain restrictions related to the right to protest being subject to judicial review. In December 2023, Germany’s civic space rating was downgraded from ‘open’ to ‘narrowed’²⁵¹ in particular due to restrictions on protests²⁵². For example, pre-emptive blanket bans on protests have been issued by municipalities for periods of up to six months, which in many cases were later struck down by administrative courts as being disproportionate²⁵³ and civil society organisations have documented 281 cases of concerns related to protests and individuals taking place between October 2023 and March 2024²⁵⁴. Civil society organisations have also raised concerns about the use of pre-emptive detention against protestors²⁵⁵, and the case of an organisation engaged in acts of civil disobedience being targeted under suspicion of forming or supporting a criminal organisation²⁵⁶. Certain techniques used by the police in the context of protests are subject to legal challenge²⁵⁷. Restrictions provided for in assembly

Civil society organisations are further affected by the ‘reverse burden of proof’ in cases where their tax-exempt status is automatically revoked due to being mentioned, even once, in the reports of the intelligence services of the Federal Government or the Länder; however, sources of these reports are generally confidential and therefore limited possibilities to refute such assertions exist.

laws in some Federal states have also come under scrutiny with a constitutional complaint pending against the assembly law in Nordrhein-Westfalen²⁵⁸. As regards access to funding, the draft democracy promotion law aimed at providing more structural Federal funding for civil society organisations engaged in democracy promotion activities, which had been submitted to Parliament in December 2022²⁵⁹, has so far not advanced further towards adoption and remains at committee stage²⁶⁰. Furthermore, the Government has continued work on the preparation of an ‘engagement strategy’ in close cooperation with civil society organisations, which, following a year-long consultation process from December 2022 to December 2023, is set to be adopted by the Federal Government before the end of 2024, and will provide a framework to facilitate and support voluntary engagement²⁶¹.
