ABSTRACT

The German justice system continues to perform efficiently and benefits from a very high level of perceived judicial independence among the general public. The Pact for the Rule of Law was not prolonged and no further steps were taken on the federal level to continue to ensure adequate resources for the judiciary and in relation to the level of salary of judges. This remains a challenge, also with a substantial number of retirements of judges in the next few years. Targeted amendments to regulations of judges' status related to constitutional values are being discussed. There have been no steps taken so far to follow-up on the announcement to reform the right of Ministers of Justice to issue individual instructions to prosecutors. A new digital initiative provides federal funding for digitalisation projects. A revised proposal to introduce digital documentation of main proceedings in criminal cases through audio recordings has been submitted to Parliament, following mixed reactions to the first draft.

The update of Germany's strategic anti-corruption framework for the federal administration remains pending. A number of reforms set out in the Government's coalition agreement are still outstanding, including the revision of political party financing rules. A lobby register is in place, while work to establish a legislative footprint is ongoing. Shortcomings remain in the regulation of asset disclosures for parliamentarians and Government officials and with regard to fragmented and inconsistent post-employment rules and cooling-off periods but some initiative is taken to prepare new preventative guidelines. New whistleblower protection legislation has been adopted in May 2023. A revision of administrative offences was announced to strengthen the liability of and sanctions for companies for criminal offences to fight foreign bribery more effectively. A recent ruling highlighted the scope of the offence of trading in influence by members of Parliament. Overall, the financial damage caused by corruption decreased, while the number of investigations into corruption rose significantly compared to the previous year reported. High-level corruption is addressed, without any identifiable systemic weaknesses.

Media pluralism and freedom in Germany are ensured by strong legal and institutional safeguards, with a high degree of independence of the state media authorities and public service broadcasters. Amendments to the State Media Treaty concerning the remit of the public service broadcasters have been agreed. Following a scandal concerning one of the regional public service broadcasters, further changes to the State Media Treaty to improve compliance and control mechanisms are currently being prepared. The Federal Government maintains its plan to establish in law the right to information of the press as regards federal authorities and has started internal preparations. Authorities and journalist representatives continue to take steps to address concerns related to physical aggressions against journalists, notably when covering protests.

Civil society space continues to be considered 'open' and a draft 'democracy promotion' law aims to provide long-term federal funding to civil society projects on democracy, pluralism and political education. Some improvements regarding stakeholder involvement can be noted, while the commitment to introduce a digital law-making proposal remains pending. The National Institute of Human Rights is preparing a follow-up to the recommendations by the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions ahead of its re-accreditation in October 2023. The Government intends to come with a proposal for legislation to clarify the tax-exempt status of non-profit organisations, but no concrete steps have been taken.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Overall, concerning the recommendations in the 2022 Rule of Law Report, Germany has made:

- No further progress on continuing efforts to provide adequate resources for the justice system as part of the new Pact for the rule of law, including on the level of salaries for judges, taking into account European standards on resources and remuneration for the justice system.
- Some progress on proceeding with plans to introduce a ‘legislative footprint’ to allow for the monitoring and tracing of all interest representatives who seek to influence and contribute to specific legislative texts.
- Some progress on strengthening the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing consistency of the different applicable rules, the transparency of authorisations for future employment of high-ranking public officials, and the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries
- Some progress on taking forward the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to documents
- No progress yet on taking forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations

On this basis, and considering other developments that took place in the period of reference, it is recommended to Germany to:

- Step up efforts to ensure adequate resources for the justice system, including on the level of remuneration for judges, taking into account European standards on resources and remuneration for the justice system.
- Continue efforts to introduce a ‘legislative footprint’ to allow for the monitoring and tracing of all interest representatives who seek to influence and contribute to specific legislative texts.
- Strengthen the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing consistency of the different applicable rules, the transparency of authorisations for future employment of high-ranking public officials, and the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries.
- Advance with the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to official documents.
- Take forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations.

I. JUSTICE SYSTEM

The court system in Germany is structured in a federal manner. Jurisdiction is exercised by federal courts and by the courts of the sixteen federal states ('Länder'). The main share of competence and workload regarding the administration of justice lies with the *Länder*¹. The court structure is divided between the ordinary jurisdiction (civil and criminal) and specialised courts (administrative, finance, labour and social courts). Appointment of judges and prosecutors, except for the Federal Courts and the Prosecutor General at the Federal Court of Justice, falls within the competence of the Länder. While appointment procedures differ in details between the Länder, all share common core elements, in particular the principle of merit² and the judicial review of the process and decisions relating to appointments. For the Federal Courts, a judges' selection committee selects judges for appointment by the executive and Councils of judges of the relevant courts have to be consulted in this process³. There are currently 638 local courts, 115 regional courts and 24 higher regional courts, as well as 51 administrative courts and 15 higher administrative courts across the 16 *Länder*⁴. There are five Federal Courts: the Federal Court of Justice, the Federal Administrative Court, the Federal Finance Court, the Federal Labour Court and the Federal Social Court. Germany has a Federal Constitutional Court and as well as constitutional courts in each of the Länder. The prosecution services in Germany are part of the executive, at federal level with the Prosecutor General at the Federal Court of Justice. At the level of the Länder, each Land has its own public prosecution service. Germany participates in the European Public Prosecutor's Office (EPPO). There are 27 regional Bars in Germany⁵, which are organised under the umbrella of the German Federal Bar.

Independence

The level of perceived judicial independence in Germany continues to be very high among the general public and is now high among companies. Overall, 77% of the general population and 71% of companies perceive the level of independence of courts and judges to be 'fairly or very good' in 2023⁶. According to data in the 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard, the level remains consistently high for both the general public and companies since 2016. The perceived level of judicial independence among the general public has increased in comparison

² The principle of merit is anchored in Article 33 para. 2 of the Basic Law; mainly on the basis of the grades in the two legal state exams.

⁵ There is also a special bar for the lawyers with rights of audience in civil matters at the Federal Court of Justice.

⁶ Figures 49 and 51, 2023 EU Justice Scoreboard. The level of perceived judicial independence is categorised as follows: very low (below 30% of respondents perceive judicial independence as fairly good and very good); low (between 30-39%), average (between 40-59%), high (between 60-75%), very high (above 75%).

with 2022 (76%), as well as with 2016 (69%). It has decreased among companies in comparison with 2022 (77%) as well as with 2016 (73%).

There have been no steps taken so far regarding the announced reform on the power of Ministers of Justice to give instructions to prosecutors in individual cases. As noted in the 2022 Rule of Law Report⁷, the coalition agreement includes an intention to reform the ministerial right to instruct prosecutors in individual cases in view of the requirements of the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union⁸. However, no concrete steps have been taken at this stage and no timeline for the reform has been announced⁹. Views on the need for such a reform have been divided among the Länder as well as stakeholders¹⁰. According to Council of Europe recommendations, where the Government has the power to give instructions to prosecute a specific case, such instructions must carry with them adequate guarantees that transparency and equity are respected in accordance with national law¹¹.

Targeted amendments to the regulations of the status of judges related to constitutional values are being discussed at both federal level and in the Länder. As noted in the 2022 Rule of Law Report¹², most Länder only foresee checks by the national security agency of candidates for judicial appointments upon explicit request of the appointing authority, but in two of them standard security checks before judicial appointments take place¹³. In Bremen, amendments to the Judges' law were adopted in February 2023 that foresee that security checks can be requested by the recruiting authority based on concrete suspicions¹⁴. In Brandenburg, draft legislation to introduce regular security checks remains under discussion in Parliament¹⁵ and in Niedersachsen, the Ministry of Justice is reviewing the possibility to introduce further measures to check the adherence of candidates to constitutional values¹⁶. Generally, the aim is to ensure that judges respect the principle of constitutional loyalty before their appointment¹⁷. Furthermore, a discussion on how to deal with cases where judges return to office after having exercised a political office where they expressed views in opposition to constitutional values has emerged over the past year¹⁸. In November 2022, the Conference of the Justice Ministers of the Länder proposed certain steps to increase the effectiveness of disciplinary measures in case of extremist statements¹⁹. While stakeholders do not object to such measures, they generally consider that existing disciplinary rules are sufficient to handle such cases²⁰. On 8 January 2023, the Ministry of Justice also presented draft legislation to explicitly provide that lay judges²¹ are required to respect constitutional values, making the non-respect a mandatory ground for exclusion²². This principle already emanates from the Constitution and the case law of the Constitutional Court²³. Following a stakeholder consultation until 22 February 2023, the Ministry aims to present a proposal to Parliament in spring, with adoption intended for summer or fall 2023²⁴.

Several Länder are undertaking reforms to create a specific legal basis for the evaluation of judges. In a judgment of 7 July 2021²⁵, the Federal Administrative Court decided that key elements of the professional evaluation of civil servants (including judges) must be regulated by law and cannot be set out solely in administrative rules due to their importance for selection decisions²⁶. To implement this judgment, Nordrhein-Westfalen has adopted decrees on 1 January 2023 setting out the basis for the evaluation system of judges and prosecutors²⁷. Other Länder have either already adapted their legislation²⁸, are currently preparing legislative amendments²⁹ or consider their legislation to be already in line³⁰ with the case law of the Federal Administrative Court³¹.

recommended to Germany to “continue efforts to provide adequate resources for the justice system as part of the new pact of the rule of law, including on the level of salaries for judges, taking into account European standards on resources and remuneration for the justice system”³². While the coalition agreement included a commitment to continue the 2019 ‘Pact for the rule of law’³³, which had provided federal funding in return for the Länder creating 2 000 posts for judges and prosecutors³⁴, no follow-up has been given to this. The Ministry of Justice will only provide federal funding for digitalisation projects³⁵. The Conference of the Justice Ministers of the Länder, on 10 November 2022³⁶, has strongly called on the Federal Government to continue the Pact, requesting to maintain at least the equivalent of the previous funding (EUR 220 million), to be paid out between 2023-27. The Länder and stakeholders³⁷ continue to identify significant needs for additional human resources, also due to additional tasks stemming from federal legislation³⁸. In the meantime, in their budgets for 2023-2024, a number of Länder have included new posts for judges and prosecutors³⁹. According to a survey conducted among judges and prosecutors in 2022, 88% consider it very important that the Federal Government continues the Pact for the Rule of Law, while 78% of judges and 92% of prosecutors consider the human resources available to be insufficient⁴⁰. In addition, the level of salaries in the judiciary as compared to the gross average salary remains notably low⁴¹ and varies significantly between the *Länder*⁴². This, together with the expected retirements of around 10 000 judges by 2030, constitutes a challenge for recruitments in the judiciary⁴³. The Constitutional Court has repeatedly delivered rulings related to the adequacy of judicial salaries⁴⁴, with at least one further case pending⁴⁵. The *Länder*⁴⁶ report that salaries have been raised by 2.8% on average in nine Länder in either 2021 or 2022 to be in line with the results of the general collective bargaining for the civil service⁴⁷. In addition, in some Länder child-related parts of the family bonus have been raised in response to the case law of the Constitutional Court⁴⁸. According to European standards, judges' remuneration should be commensurate with their profession and responsibilities and be sufficient to shield them from inducements aimed at influencing their decisions⁴⁹. As no concrete steps have been taken to continue to ensure adequate resources, no further progress has been made on the implementation of the recommendation in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

A new digital initiative provides federal funding for digitalisation projects, and a governmental draft for amendments on the use of videoconferencing in civil and specialised courts has been submitted to Parliament. The level of digitalisation of justice in Germany is overall very good, notably with regard to arrangements for machine-readable judicial decisions⁵⁰ or digital solutions to initiate and follow proceedings in civil/commercial and administrative cases⁵¹. However, gaps remain regarding the publication of judgments online⁵². In the framework of a new digital initiative, the Federal Government will provide up to EUR 200 million for the period 2023-2026 to finance joint projects of the Länder and the Federal Ministry of Justice on digitalisation of justice⁵³. However, the Länder unanimously consider this amount as insufficient to tackle the challenges of digitalisation of justice⁵⁴. In the meantime, the progressive rollout⁵⁵ of the electronic file for courts and public prosecutors, due by 1 January 2026, continues⁵⁶. In addition, the Federal Ministry of Justice is pursuing projects for electronic submission of applications to courts⁵⁷ and an online procedure providing easier and less costly access to courts, based entirely on electronic communication⁵⁸. In November 2022, the Federal Government presented a draft proposal⁵⁹ on videoconferencing in civil and specialised courts. The draft has been in general welcomed by stakeholders, even if views diverge as to the circumstances in which the means of videoconference should be used in court⁶⁰. On 26 May 2023, the Federal Government submitted a revised proposal to the Federal Council⁶¹. The amended draft foresees a general obligation to hold hearings in these courts by means of videoconference if ordered by the judge or the possibility to do so if requested by all party representatives. Pursuant to the draft the court shall not only be able to permit a video hearing, but also to order it with the possibility of the addressee to object to such order. In case all counsels in a proceeding apply for a video hearing, the court shall in general order such video hearing and may only reject it in exceptional cases.

⁵⁶ The Länder are developing and coordinating three projects of the electronic file (eAS, eIP and e²A). The transition of all courts to the e-file is implemented gradually via pilot projects. The Länder have first piloted the electronic file in civil and family cases and are now moving in there towards regular operation. In some Länder, the roll-out in the specialised (labour, social, administrative and financial) courts is ongoing or has been already completed. All Länder expect to have fully implemented the electronic file by 1 January 2026.

Following mixed stakeholder reactions, a revised draft proposal for a law aiming to introduce digital documentation of main proceedings in criminal cases has been submitted by the Government to the Federal Council. On 22 November 2022, the Ministry of Justice presented for consultation a draft legislative proposal to introduce digital documentation of main proceedings in criminal cases, initially through audio and video recording, with the audio recording to be transformed into a written protocol through a transcription software⁶². Currently, for such proceedings at regional and higher regional courts, only a formal protocol is prepared, with the procedural steps but not the content or interventions, meaning that judges, prosecutors and lawyers take their own notes⁶³. The transcript would only be a support tool, not replacing the status of the formal protocol, and would not create new grounds for appeal. The Bar and associations of lawyers have welcomed it⁶⁴, as it responds to long-standing demands, and they consider it will ensure accurate and objective documentation of proceedings and reduce the potential of conflicting interpretations. However, Judges' and Prosecutors' Associations criticised the proposal, particularly the use of video recordings, voicing concerns over the impact on victims' willingness to provide testimony, insufficient protection of personal rights and risks of leaks⁶⁵. On the side of the Länder, concerns have also been raised, including technical challenges and costs of the reform⁶⁶. Before preparing the draft proposal, the Ministry of Justice had set up an expert group, which had concluded with a preference for audio recording with automatic transcript over video⁶⁷. Following the mixed reactions to the draft, on 10 May 2023 the Government presented an amended proposal which now limits the digital documentation to an audio recording. The possibility to also require a video recording is left open to the *Länder*⁶⁸. The proposal has been submitted to the Federal Council; if adopted, the documentation would be introduced in a pilot phase as of 2026 and only fully enter into force in 2030⁶⁹.

Efficiency

The justice system overall continues to perform efficiently. The efficiency in administrative cases at first instance appears to have stabilised, with the disposition time slightly decreasing in 2021 (from 426 days in 2020 to 422 days in 2021) and the high clearance rate remaining stable (at 110% in 2020 and 109.9 % in 2021)⁷⁰. However, the overall number of pending administrative cases in 2021 remains unchanged compared to 2020 and is relatively high at 0.9 per 100 inhabitants⁷¹. The performance indicators on civil and commercial litigious cases have improved from 98.1% in 2020 to 105.1% in 2021⁷². After the steady increase of the length of proceedings in such cases from 2012 to 2020, the disposition time has slightly decreased in 2021 and is at 231 days⁷³, while the number of incoming cases has continued a decreasing trend⁷⁴. To address the challenges posed by the phenomenon of ‘mass’ civil court cases, a working group examined a possibility of a preliminary ruling procedure that would allow dealing with these cases more efficiently⁷⁵ and in June the Ministry of Justice presented a draft for such a procedure with the Federal Court of Justice⁷⁶. As noted in the 2022 Rule of Law Report, the ‘mass’ civil court cases present serious challenges for judges to ensure handling of cases within adequate timeframes⁷⁷.

According to a study by the Ministry of Justice, among the main reasons for the observed decline are an increased interest in preventive and consensual conflict resolution for business activities and private contacts, perception of legal procedures as being stressful, uneconomical and time-consuming leading to a greater use of legal tech providers, or attorneys more frequently advising against going to court and narrower legal assistance coverage by insurance companies. II. ANTI-CORRUPTION FRAMEWORK

Germany has several authorities responsible for the prevention of corruption at the federal level, including the Federal Ministry of the Interior and Community and the Supreme Audit Institution. Competences for the policy coordination and corruption prevention in the 16 Ministries of the Interior at the Länder level depend on the anti-corruption frameworks in place. The Federal Court of Auditors⁷⁸ and the Courts of Auditors at the Länder level have a preventive role in monitoring the public spending, including controls of corruption. As to the repression of corruption, Germany has a decentralised approach. The sixteen Länder are in charge of the investigation and prosecution of corruption offences across Germany. Some Länder have specialised police and prosecution offices on corruption in place. The Federal Criminal Police Office plays a role in the information-exchange between the international level and the local level as well as among police offices at the Länder level.

The perception among experts and business executives is that the level of corruption in the public sector remains low. In the 2022 Corruption Perceptions Index by Transparency International, Germany scores 79/100 and ranks 5th in the European Union and 9th globally⁷⁹. This perception has been relatively stable over the past five years.⁸⁰ The 2023 Special Eurobarometer on Corruption shows that 57% of respondents consider corruption widespread in their country (EU average 70%) and 7% of respondents feel personally affected by corruption in their daily lives (EU average 24%)⁸¹. As regards businesses, 47% of companies consider that corruption is widespread (EU average 65%) and 14% consider that corruption is a problem when doing business (EU average 35%)⁸². Furthermore, 30% of respondents find that there are enough successful prosecutions to deter people from corrupt practices (EU average 32%)⁸³, while 33% of companies believe that people and businesses caught for bribing a senior official are appropriately punished (EU average 30%)⁸⁴.

The update of Germany's strategic anti-corruption framework at the federal level and revision of its rules on gifts remain pending⁸⁵. The revision of the 2003 'Federal Government Directive Concerning the Prevention of Corruption in the Federal Administration', which sets out key elements of the federal administration's corruption prevention strategy⁸⁶, led by the Ministry of Interior, was originally expected to be finalised by the end of 2022⁸⁷, but has seen delays. While there is no concrete timeline, a possible conclusion has been set by the end of 2023⁸⁸. Germany has been encouraged during the UN Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) review to seek, where appropriate, input from stakeholders outside of the public sector⁸⁹, which has not been sought yet. The still ongoing revision of the 2004 rules on the prohibition to accept favours and gifts, with an aim to assess whether more up-to-date, harmonised rules and increased legal certainty would be required, is also taking longer than initially planned and is expected to be finalised in the second half of 2023⁹⁰. The publication of the next comprehensive compilation report on integrity in the federal public administration of 2022 is planned for the end of 2023, including, among others, specific data on corruption cases and suspicion of corruption in the federal public administration⁹¹.

⁷⁸ There is also a role for the Federal Court of Auditors to assess the implementation of the Federal Government Corruption Prevention Directive. It can provide recommendations for corruption risks and for corruption prevention.

⁷⁹ Transparency International (2023), Corruption Perceptions Index 2022. The level of perceived corruption is categorised as follows: low (the perception among experts and business executives of public sector corruption scores above 79); relatively low (scores between 79-60), relatively high (scores between 59-50), high (scores below 50).

There are plans to further strengthen the legal framework for corruption, as envisaged in the Government's coalition agreement, which for now are at an initial stage. Corruption is already broadly criminalised in Germany⁹². As noted in the 2022 Rule of Law Report, the Government's coalition agreement included, in addition, reform plans to make the criminal UNCAC Review Report of Germany for the Review Cycle 2016-2021 (2020), pp. 29, 31-32. The strategy is limited to the federal level and to the prevention of corruption. Stakeholders consider the system for the monitoring of the directive to be well-functioning, information received from LobbyControl in the context of the country visit to Germany. According to information received from the Ministry of Interior in the context of the country visit, the update is not envisaged to be a complete overhaul but rather of editorial nature to modernise the directive. GRECO considers the directive to be a solid framework, see GRECO, Fifth Evaluation Round, Evaluation Report Germany (2019), p. 4.

⁸⁷ Information received from the Ministry of Interior in the context of the country visit to Germany in 2022. An inter-ministerial working group, which includes contact persons for corruption prevention and experts from the internal audit units prepares the revision, submitting it to all federal ministries for approval and to the Federal Cabinet for adoption. Notably, the OECD and GRECO have commended Germany's system of contact persons for the prevention of corruption and have recommended this practice to other OECD member states. See Ministry of Interior (2021), Integrity in the public administration – Annual Report 2020, p. 58, 3. GRECO, Fifth Evaluation Round, Evaluation Report Germany (2019), p. 4.

⁹⁰ Information received from the Ministry of Interior in the context of the country visit to Germany, noting that thematically the rules are envisaged to be significantly more comprehensive, including concrete examples that aim at informing public officials. See also 2022 and 2021 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 10 (for 2022) and p. 7 (for 2021).

⁹¹ The first comprehensive 2020 compilation report on integrity in the federal public administration was published in spring 2022, see Ministry of Interior (2021), Integrity in the public administration – Annual Report 2020. The report consists of three elements that were last year for the first time combined in one comprehensive report, including the yearly Anti-Corruption Report, the report on the federal public administration and the report of the use of external staff in the public administration.

offence for bribery involving members of Parliament (MPs) more effective⁹³. At the moment, unethical commercial conduct⁹⁴ by exerting their influence outside of their official activities in Parliament – such as acting as brokers for Government COVID-19 mask deals while receiving personal financial benefits in the form of high commission payments – remains outside of the scope of the criminal code, as recently confirmed by the Federal Court of Justice⁹⁵. Combined with insufficient regulation of parliamentarians’ secondary activities, this leaves room for concern⁹⁶. While Germany has recently taken an overall approach of minimisation of criminal provisions where they appear outdated or disproportionate⁹⁷, legislative amendments to address this gap regarding members of Parliament are expected for the end of 2023⁹⁸. The Minister of Justice plans to provide for precisions in the Code of Administrative Offences, including an adaptation of the level of sanctions for corporate companies⁹⁹, and does not plan to propose another comprehensive legislative reform¹⁰⁰. Increased corporate liability¹⁰¹ for criminal offences could further facilitate Germany’s enforcement levels in criminal prosecutions of foreign bribery¹⁰².

⁹⁴ Other than for public officials, commercial conduct of members of the Parliament is not prohibited in Germany.

⁹⁸ According to information received from the Ministry of Justice in the context of the country visit to Germany, three options are discussed between the Ministry of Justice and the Parliament, including an amendment of section 108(e) of the Criminal Code, the creation of a new provision in the Criminal Code as well as the creation of a new provision in the law of Parliamentarians as unethical remunerated conduct of a company taking advantage of a parliamentarian.

⁹⁹ Plans include the increase of the currently applicable maximum fines of EUR 10 million as corporate sanctions to increase the deterrent effect, particularly with regard to large, global enterprises, while considering the introduction of revenue-based fines, according to information received by the Ministry of Justice in the context of the country visit to Germany.

See also Transparency International, Exporting Corruption (2022), pp. 8, 48-49, referencing

Enforcement against corruption in practice, including high-level corruption, shows no systemic weaknesses. There were no concerns raised by stakeholders with regard to the treatment of high-level corruption cases or the investigation, prosecution or final judgments of corruption and high-level corruption cases¹⁰³. The levels of human and financial resources as well as high specialisation for corruption cases within the police, the prosecution service, and the courts are considered overall adequate to carry out their tasks¹⁰⁴. Cooperation between the relevant anti-corruption entities, including the prosecution service, police, the Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU) and other relevant entities is reported to be good¹⁰⁵, although concerns were flagged, as previously reported, with regard to the operational effectiveness of the FIU in practice and backlogs¹⁰⁶, the latter of which have been cleared by the end of May according to the Government¹⁰⁷. The Ministry of Finance has announced to strengthen investigators and digitalisation and to appoint a new FIU head with expertise in financial crime to take up his role as of 1 July 2023¹⁰⁸.

The number of investigated corruption crimes has significantly increased, while the overall financial damage caused by corruption decreased compared to the previous year reported¹⁰⁹. The latest 2022 official National Situation Report details 7433 police-registered corruption cases in 2021, which presents a stark increase of approximately 35% compared to 2020¹¹⁰. As in the previous year, the high numbers are due to investigations of active and passive bribery, with a significant increase of aggravated bribery cases with particularly high values of undue financial advantages¹¹¹. In addition, in this reporting period, the high numbers also relate to aggravated corruption cases committed within the framework of a criminal organisations. At the same time, the number of public officials accepting a bribe is at the lowest level of the past five years, which may be due to closed administrations during the COVID-19 pandemic¹¹². The detected financial damage caused by corruption has notably decreased compared to 2020, by approximately 25% amounting to EUR 61 million in 2021. Of those who accepted a bribe, 55% have been public officials, a decrease by 16% compared to 2020. Construction is the most affected sector, while the business sector and public administration moderate enforcement in foreign bribery cases, including 16 opened investigations, 6 commenced cases and 40 conclusions of cases with sanctions in the years 2018-2021, while also noting the lack of criminal liability of corporations as the main weakness.

represent the preferred targets¹¹³. The report, which illustrates in a robust annual analysis recent trends, developments and statistics on the phenomenon of corruption and Germany's efforts to repress corruption, could be further improved by including information broken down by the 16 *Länder*¹¹⁴ and references to the nexus with organised crime¹¹⁵.

There are plans to further strengthen the mandatory lobby register rules. Germany's mandatory lobby register¹¹⁶ that came into force on 1 January 2022¹¹⁷ is administered by the Federal Parliament (Bundestag) hosting more than 5 500 interest representative entries after 15 months of existence¹¹⁸. All individuals, companies, associations, and other organisations must register, if they contact members, bodies, factions or groups of the Federal Parliament, the Federal Government, including parliamentary state secretaries, heads of directorates and other top-level executives above this level, in order to directly or indirectly influence the decision-making process. The legislative process in the Parliament has started in June on Government proposals to widen its scope to register a larger group of interest representatives¹¹⁹, and to also record lower-level meetings at technical level in the ministries from where legislative drafts

¹¹³ This data illustrates a change to the previous year, where the services sector was the most affected, while the public administration alone represented the preferred target, see 2022 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 12.

¹¹⁷ The need to enhance lobbying transparency has been a long-standing concern. See, for example, GRECO, Fifth Round Evaluation – Evaluation Report Germany, para. 63, and UNODC, Review of implementation of the United Nations Convention against Corruption. Executive summary - Germany. For the level of lobbying transparency at the 16 Laender level, see Transparency International's Lobbyranking der Bundesländer 2022, including an overview over available lobby registers, legislative footprints, cooling off periods and codes of conduct at local level. ¹¹⁹ See Legislative proposal of the Federal Parliament for the Amendment of the Lobby Register (20/7346). The first reading has taken place on 23 June 2023; Bundestag (2023), Amendment of the Lobby Register Law. Amendments are proposed in a differentiated manner that protect fundamental rights. According to information received from LobbyControl in the context of the country visit to Germany, an amendment that would address concerns regarding the large scope of exemptions would have to include churches and religious communities, trade unions and employer associations to allow for their mandatory registration, representing the most important lobby actors in Germany that are so far not obliged to register. 2021 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 9. See also Abgeordnetenwatch, Intransparent Lobby Contacts of members of Parliament, hardly any control of the rules: Report of the Council of Europe criticises Germany again due to the lack of reforms (30 November 2022).

originate¹²⁰. These plans are yet to be taken forward. Current debates focus on the transparency requirement of the lobby register to publish third-party donations to the registering organisation that are above EUR 20 000 for its potential negative effects on donors' willingness to donate in the future¹²¹. Deficits were also flagged with regard to the comparability of entered lobby cost data¹²² and the frequent lack of registration of companies that outsource their lobbying activity through a chain of several sub-contracts, which present an obstacle to tracing the real interest representatives behind the lobbying activity¹²³. The Parliament Administration follows up only on the most implausible entries and evident formal errors¹²⁴ and verifies the entered data for any suspicious content¹²⁵. The administration relies therefore on third parties' compliance monitoring, with so far no reported case of missing or false entries within the first year of the register's existence¹²⁶. Consequently, no sanctions have been applied in 2022¹²⁷. A year in, interest representatives are now also obliged to confirm for the first time their entries in the register by signature¹²⁸. An official assessment of the lobby register is envisaged for spring 2025.

¹²¹ See Handelsblatt, Government coalition intends to ease the lobby regulations for non-profit organisations (23 February 2023). Information also received from Ministry of Justice/ Transparency International/ LobbyControl in the context of the country visit to Germany, raising concerns as to the requirement's potentially disadvantageous effects on civil society versus other interest representatives, noting however that there is no obvious decline in donations after one year of existence of the lobby register. Discussions centre on the introduction of a specific percentage of the organisation's annual budget or specific ranges instead of a threshold.

¹²⁴ According to information received by the Parliament Administration in the context of the country visit to Germany, the first year of the lobby register in practice has shown the need to provide much more information to interest representatives than expected to improve the quality of the register data, with a number of implausible figures or incorrect entries that are mainly caused by misunderstandings.

¹²⁶ Information received from the Parliament Administration/LobbyControl/Transparency International in the context of the country visit to Germany. Detected false entries can trigger administrative fines of up to EUR 50.000. Stakeholders consider the ceiling of fines be too low particularly for larger and global enterprises, as well as the lack of public information on whether breaches were fined, as reputational risk may have a greater effect than monetary fines. Contribution from Transparency International Germany for the 2023 Rule of Law Report, p. 1; information received from LobbyControl in the context of the country visit to Germany. The Lobby Register Act provides some public information on significant breaches by special interest representatives of the code of conduct.

¹²⁸ According to information received from the Administration of the Parliament in the context of the country visit to Germany, interest representatives have not yet horizontally complied with this yearly obligation, since the first year of the register's existence has passed.

Consultations to introduce a legislative footprint on lobbying during the legislative process are continuing within the Federal Government, showing some progress. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to “proceed with plans to introduce a ‘legislative footprint’ to allow for the monitoring and tracing of all interest representatives who seek to influence and contribute to specific legislative texts”¹²⁹. The introduction of such a ‘legislative footprint’¹³⁰ or a digital legislative portal to publish who sought to influence legislative drafts is delayed¹³¹. Consultations within the Federal Government are continuing¹³². The decision-making process is at an initial stage due to considerations to link the legislative footprint – rather than to the reform of the lobby register¹³³ – to a broader e-government initiative¹³⁴ beyond the exclusive remit of the Parliament, requiring a coordination process with the Government. A feasibility study is currently considered to inform this coordination process¹³⁵. The collection and disclosure of comprehensive information on who influences whom in the decision-making process would help to ensure a level playing field for all interest representatives contributing to balanced legislative outcomes¹³⁶. It would also help to reduce risks of corruption, conflicts of interest and regulatory capture, while the public interest is at the core of the prospective legislation. A decision on whether or not to link the legislative footprint to the e-government initiative is envisaged for the end of 2023, while the introduction of the legislative footprint is expected by the end of 2024¹³⁷. Against this background, there is some progress regarding the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

Supplementary guidelines on post-employment are under preparation but do not address the need to ensure more consistency in the various existing rules¹³⁸. The 2022 Rule of Law report recommended to Germany to “[s]trengthen the existing rules on revolving doors by increasing consistency of the different applicable rules, the transparency of authorisations for future employment of high-ranking public officials, and the length of cooling-off periods for federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries”¹³⁹. The Federal Government does not plan to legislate to address the persistent concerns as to the different application of Germany's 'revolving doors' rules, including varying cooling-off periods and the large discretion in the decision of superiors regarding future employment of state secretaries and directors general¹⁴⁰, despite international recommendations¹⁴¹. Notably, in case of concerns of interference with the public interest, the Federal Government can prohibit, wholly or in part, the taking up of new employment of high-ranking public officials¹⁴². For federal ministers and federal parliamentary state secretaries, the cooling-off periods are shorter with a 12-18 month-period, compared to the period applicable to state secretaries and directors general of three to five years and thus could warrant a longer mandatory cooling-off period, as recommended by GRECO¹⁴³. New preventative guidelines will be prepared for the Federal Government to sensitise retiring public officials¹⁴⁴. As limited action has been taken to strengthen the existing rules on revolving doors, some progress has been made regarding the recommendation in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

The monitoring of secondary activities of members of Parliament constitutes a challenge.

As in the previous year, there were delays in the reporting of parliamentarians' side activities in 2022 that continued in 2023¹⁴⁵. The publication of the members' declaration of secondary activities was completed in April 2023 except for a few individual cases¹⁴⁶. In September 2022, the administration of the Federal Parliament updated its guidelines for members of Parliament, ¹⁴⁰ Input from Germany for the 2023 Rule of Law Report, pp. 12-14, including the Government's underlying reasoning, which prefers to provide for discretion to balance conflicting constitutional rights and the differentiation of career prospects of, for example, term-limited ministers and life-long public officials.

¹⁴² The future employment is assumed to interfere with the public interest, if it is pursued in an area in which the member of the Government or parliamentary state secretary was active during his/her term in office or may otherwise undermine public trust in the integrity of the Federal Government. For more details on the procedure, see GRECO Fifth Evaluation Round – Evaluation Report, paras. 86 et seq., indicating several cases where future employment was restricted.

¹⁴³ See GRECO recommendation in the GRECO Fifth Evaluation Round – Evaluation Report, para. 89, highlighting also that, according to the government, the difference between the length of the cooling off period between politically appointed civil servants (three to five years) and ministers/parliamentary state secretaries (12-18 months) takes into account that civil servants normally have life tenure with their activities usually ending on the grounds of old age. Federal ministers and parliamentary state secretaries hold their offices for a more temporary period of time. In this context, stakeholders, including LobbyControl and Transparency International, call for a three-year cooling-off period to better prevent and reduce risks of undue influence, see for instance LobbyControl, Lobbypedia – Cooling-off Period.

including the rules on remunerated side jobs¹⁴⁷. This follows amendments of the Act on members of the Federal Parliament¹⁴⁸ adopted in 2021, which addressed some integrity challenges for parliamentarians¹⁴⁹. The reform introduced a prohibition for members of Parliament of remunerated lobby activities as secondary activities and of remunerated lectures that are in connection to their parliamentary work¹⁵⁰. Supervision and enforcement present obstacles in practice due to the lack of a fully independent oversight body or ethics committee with a mandate to investigate breaches¹⁵¹. The reform does not entail the disclosure of the actual time spent on the secondary activity¹⁵². Similarly, ad-hoc disclosures are not required when a conflict between specific private interests of a member of Parliament emerges in relation to a matter under discussion in Parliament¹⁵³.

Asset disclosure rules for members of the Federal Government are incomplete¹⁵⁴. According to the Government, the transparency measures in place have proven appropriate to prevent corruption in practice, not requiring or justifying any legislative changes¹⁵⁵. As previously reported, for members of the Federal Parliament, the categories of information to be disclosed in their financial declarations does not extend to liabilities and significant assets, such as shareholdings in private enterprises below the current threshold¹⁵⁶. financial interests are subject to notification if the respective member is in charge of an issue in a parliamentary committee, while being remunerated through a secondary activity¹⁵⁷.

The revision of Germany’s political party financing rules has not yet begun¹⁵⁸, while the Constitutional Court ruled against the unscheduled, additional increase of party finances.

Party financing is regulated in the Law for Members of the Parliament and the Law for Political Parties¹⁵⁹. The 2021 coalition agreement includes plans to regulate sponsoring and hidden campaign finance by third parties¹⁶⁰, but an indicative timeline for reform in this regard is not yet set¹⁶¹. Furthermore, to strengthen its oversight and control functions the Parliament’s administration has not yet increased its human and financial resources¹⁶². The Parliament Administration is not enabled to have access to the tax information of donors for the monitoring of the regularity of party finance, in order to be able to cross-check data during the verification process of statements of accounts of political parties¹⁶³. Concerns remain regarding the significant time lapse between the party income and its reporting¹⁶⁴. On 24 January 2023, the Constitutional Court ruled that the unscheduled additional increase in public funding for political parties in 2018 by approximately EUR 25 million to a total of EUR 190 million is Seven times members of Parliament received a warning. In 64 cases, members of Parliament were reminded of the codes of conduct, while no sanctions were applied. The Law of members of the Parliament provides for fines of up to half their annual remuneration, depending on the severity of the individual case and the degree of fault. unconstitutional¹⁶⁵. While political parties will have to return the increase, the risk of their dependency on private donations have been emphasised¹⁶⁶.

Legislation on whistleblower protection has been adopted¹⁶⁷. A new draft law was published in April 2022¹⁶⁸ and passed by the Federal Parliament on 16 December 2022¹⁶⁹, after a first attempt in 2021 had not gone through. The draft law was largely welcomed by stakeholders as it provided for several improvements compared to the previous draft¹⁷⁰. However, the draft law did not pass the chamber of the Länder representatives on 10 February 2023¹⁷¹. On 9 May, the conciliation committee agreed on a compromise proposal which was adopted on 31 May¹⁷². In 2022, 76.7% of corruption investigations were initiated on the basis of external information and public disclosures¹⁷³, pointing to the need for horizontal whistleblower protection.

A new public procurement transformation package to modernise public procurement is under way with the potential for better corruption prevention. Public consultations on the package of the Federal Ministry for Economic Affairs and Climate Action to simplify, digitise and speed up public procurement procedures have been conducted until mid-February 2023¹⁷⁴. The initiative, which is part of the Government's coalition agreement, was overall welcomed by stakeholders¹⁷⁵ carrying the potential to increase transparency and thus corruption prevention in public contracting¹⁷⁶. In a previously reported corruption scandal relating to procured medical equipment, the Federal Court of Justice has ruled in the case of passive bribery of members of the Parliament who have brokered facemask deals that, although arguably unethical, such conduct would not constitute bribery under the current law¹⁷⁷. For all contracting authorities that are not under the obligation to consult the electronic competition register¹⁷⁸, the current consultation obligations of the corruption register of the Länder and the commercial central register remain in place¹⁷⁹.

III. MEDIA PLURALISM AND MEDIA FREEDOM

In Germany, the Basic Law and secondary legislation form a well-established legal framework, guaranteeing media freedom and pluralism as well as the right of access to information¹⁸⁰. The main legislative competence in the area lies with the Länder, which conclude state treaties to establish a common media policy framework, including notably the State Media Treaty¹⁸¹. The 3rd amending treaty to the State Media Treaty, concluded in November 2022, is presently undergoing ratification and is intended to enter into force in July 2023¹⁸². Currently, a 4th amendment to the State Media Treaty was concluded by the governments of the Länder and the parliaments of the Länder have started the process of ratification¹⁸³. This is completed by national legislation and safeguarded by constitutional guarantees and the relevant jurisprudence of the Constitutional Court. The federal structure results in a variety of legal frameworks, supervisory structures and public service broadcasters providing an additional safeguard for media pluralism and media freedom¹⁸⁴.

There have been no recent changes concerning the 14 State Media Authorities functioning as regulatory authorities for commercial broadcasters at the Länder level. As previously reported, the independence of such authorities remains ensured, including as regards

¹⁷⁸ As previously reported, since 1 June 2022 public contracting authorities can consult the electronic competition register in support of public procurement processes, which hosts and flags relevant information for the exclusion of bidders from procurements, including on final convictions, penalty orders and fines for corruption, bribery, money laundering, tax evasion, and other serious crimes. There is only a consultation obligation in place for contract values beyond EUR 30.000 and for contracting authorities responsible for the areas of water, energy, traffic and postal service as of the EU threshold. 2021 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 11. financing¹⁸⁵. The 2023 Media Pluralism Monitor concludes that “in 2022 there were no signs of any kind of dependence on the state media authorities”¹⁸⁶.

The self-regulation of the press by the German Press Council is well established and developed. The Press Council, composed of journalists’ and publishers’ associations, is a well-accepted actor in the German media landscape. In 2022, the number of complaints on press publications received by the Press Council decreased significantly to the volume recorded before the COVID 19 pandemic which was the topic of a large number of complaints in the past years (1 733 complaints received in 2022, compared to 2 556 in 2021 and a peak of 4 085 complaints in 2020)¹⁸⁷. The Press Council issued 47 public reprimands in 2022 of which more than 80% have been published. More than half of these reprimands related to the lack of a clear distinction between editorial and commercial content or violations of the protection of privacy as defined in the Press Code¹⁸⁸.

Transparency of media ownership continues to be ensured at a good level. The State Media Treaty of 2020 included a protocol declaration of the Länder agreeing on the objective to ensure a future-proof media concentration framework. The Länder are in the process of discussing first proposals for a revision of the current framework¹⁸⁹. As in many other Member States, Germany’s media system continues to be impacted by the digitalisation of media and a transition in business models¹⁹⁰. At the beginning of 2023, large publishing houses announced staff cuts¹⁹¹. As regards media ownership transparency, legislative provisions are in place for commercial broadcasters as well as online news media and the press¹⁹². As reported in 2021 and 2022, access to the information covering television, radio, press and online media is notably ensured via a public database of the Commission on Concentration in the Media (KEK)¹⁹³. The indicator on transparency of media ownership of the 2023 Media Pluralism Monitor shows a low risk¹⁹⁴.

An update to the programme mandate for the public service broadcasters was agreed in 2022¹⁹⁵. The 3rd amending treaty to the State Media Treaty aims to adapt the remit and programming of the public service broadcasters to changing viewing habits, notably by increasing the flexibility of the public service broadcasters to adapt their offer and strengthening control mechanisms in the areas of programming and finance¹⁹⁶.

Stronger compliance safeguards for the public service broadcasters are being prepared.

This is a reaction to a 2022 scandal on allegations of mismanagement concerning the public service broadcaster for Berlin and Brandenburg (RBB)¹⁹⁷, which ultimately led to the dismissal of its director, who at the time was chairing the ARD¹⁹⁸. Many observers consider this incident as revealing certain weaknesses in the specific case of the RBB, and not a general issue in the system¹⁹⁹. However, it is seen as having impacted the image of public service broadcasters²⁰⁰. In this context the 4th amendment to the State Media Treaty aims to strengthen mechanisms for compliance, transparency, and independent supervisory committees²⁰¹. The incident may also have indirect repercussions on future discussions on the financing of the public service broadcasters, which are also impacted by the increased inflation²⁰². At the same time, the independence safeguards for public service media remain strong and there is an established mechanism to assess the financing needs. In this regard, the legal requirement to ensure an adequate financing of the public service broadcasters has been confirmed in a 2021 ruling of the Federal Constitutional Court²⁰³. The next report of the Commission for the determination of the financial needs of public service broadcasters is due in 2024. With regard to the long-term perspective, the Länder have set-up a ‘future council’ of experts to come up with recommendations on the future of public service broadcasting²⁰⁴.

The Federal Government maintains its plan to establish in law the right to information of the press as regards federal authorities and some progress has been made by starting internal preparations²⁰⁵.

The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to “take forward the plan to create a legal basis for a right to information of the press as regards federal authorities, taking into account European standards on access to documents”²⁰⁶, which was part of the coalition agreement of the Federal Government²⁰⁷. The jurisprudence of the Federal Constitutional Court has confirmed the right of the press at national level to request access to information based on the Constitution²⁰⁸. At the regional level, there are press laws in place guaranteeing the access to information by journalists in most *Länder*²⁰⁹. However, as previously reported²¹⁰, civil society organisations, journalist representatives and publishers see gaps in the legal framework regarding the access to information from federal authorities which could be addressed by the planned law²¹¹. The Federal Government maintains its plan and has stated that internal preparations have begun, however details remain unspecified²¹². GRECO concluded at the end of 2022 that its recommendation to independently evaluate the Freedom of Information Act and consider possible improvements has not yet been implemented²¹³. As preparations have begun, there has been some progress on the implementation of the recommendation made in the 2022 Rule of Law Report.

Authorities and journalist representatives continue to address concerns related to physical aggressions against journalists. The Mapping Media Freedom project recorded 87 violations of media freedom in Germany in 2022, with more than two in three incidents taking place during protests; this data should be compared to the 119 alerts in 2021²¹⁴. This downward trend could partly be explained by the decrease of protests related to COVID-19 measures, to which aggressions against journalists were linked in 2020 and 2021²¹⁵. Preliminary police statistics for 2022 indicate a total of 320 registered criminal offences in the broad target category ‘media’, showing a slight increase compared to 276 cases in 2021²¹⁶. Since the last report, five alerts relating to events in Germany have been registered on the Council of Europe’s Platform to promote the protection of journalism and safety of journalists²¹⁷. The Press Council continues to see a need for a better protection of journalists when covering protests or major public events, and journalist representatives continue to point to a perception of a high risk for journalists when reporting on societal groups hostile to media²¹⁸. Efforts continue to increase exchanges between the police and journalists, for example with initiatives such as training courses by the Press Council in police academies as well as further measures for the protection of journalists and the sensibilisation of police officers at the level of the *Länder*²¹⁹. Moreover, an update of the existing principles of conduct for the media and the police continues to be discussed between the Länder, the Press Council and media stakeholders²²⁰. The 2023 Media Pluralism Monitor identifies a low risk for its indicator on journalistic profession, standards and protection, but concludes that the risk in this area is increasing, notably due to attacks on journalists²²¹.

Civil society and journalist associations continue to see potential for further improvement regarding the overall professional environment for journalists. While strategic lawsuits against public participation targeting journalists are not seen as a major problem, civil society and journalist associations continue to flag that there are some cases of abusive litigation against journalists²²². In January 2023, Reporters without Borders and the Society for Civil Rights announced that they had filed an appeal to the Federal Constitutional Court against the Federal Intelligence Service Act, in relation to their concerns concerning potential risks of journalists being subject to electronic surveillance measures by intelligence services, in particular when interacting with potential informants²²³. In March 2023, information released by the Federal Government highlighted a relevant volume of remuneration paid by federal ministries to renowned journalists of the public service broadcasters and private media, notably for event moderation, triggering a debate on potential conflicts of interest for these journalists²²⁴.

IV. OTHER INSTITUTIONAL ISSUES RELATED TO CHECKS AND BALANCES

Germany is a federal republic, with powers distributed between the federal and the sixteen state Governments. The separation of powers is enshrined in the Basic Law²²⁵ and the constitutions of the Länder. At the federal level, federal legislative power is vested in the Federal Parliament (Bundestag) and the representative body of the Länder (Bundesrat)²²⁶. The Government, the Bundesrat or members of the Bundestag can submit legislative proposals²²⁷. Constitutional review is ensured by the Federal Constitutional Court and the constitutional courts of the Länder. The German Human Rights Institute and the Federal Anti-Discrimination Agency contribute to upholding fundamental rights.

There are some improvements regarding stakeholder involvement in policymaking, while the commitment to introduce a digital law-making proposal remains pending. Following the commitment in the coalition agreement to ensure early consultation of stakeholders noted in the 2022 Rule of Law report²²⁸, stakeholders generally report improvements in their inclusion in the policy-making process, though the situation is considered to vary based on the responsible Ministry²²⁹. Especially short consultation periods regarding individual legislative proposals continue to be criticised²³⁰. A study published in 2023 on the use of expert panels in the preparation of draft legislation shows that such panels appear to be gaining in importance but notes a lack of transparency in the selection of experts and the limited representation of civil society²³¹. As regards the Government's commitment to create a digital portal on the law-making process, no updates have been reported.

On 1 January 2023, Germany had 12 leading judgments of the European Court of Human Rights pending implementation, a decrease of one compared to the previous year²³². At that time, Germany's rate of leading judgments from the past 10 years that remained pending was at 43% (compared to 37% in 2022) and the average time that the judgments had been pending implementation was 4 years and 2 months (compared to 3 years and 2 months in 2022)²³³. The oldest leading judgment, pending implementation for 6 years, concerns the access to and the efficient functioning of justice in public trial²³⁴. On 15 June 2023, the number of leading judgments pending implementation remains 12²³⁵.

The German Institute of Human Rights is preparing a follow-up to the recommendations ahead of its re-accreditation in October 2023. As announced in the coalition agreement²³⁶, the Institute's financial and human resources were increased, and the Institute considers them adequate to allow it to carry out its tasks²³⁷. In preparation of its reaccreditation, the Institute, currently accredited with A Status, is preparing clarifications to address the recommendations addressed by the Sub-Committee on accreditation (SCA) of the Global Alliance of Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI) on the Institute's structure, mandate and the applicable legal framework, including through an external legal expertise on possible avenues to strengthen its mandate²³⁸. As previously reported, the re-accreditation of the Institute has been deferred by the SCA for 18 months until October 2023²³⁹. In 2022, the Institute had already proposed to have an ex officio standing to participate in parliamentary hearings and to provide comments on draft laws with human rights implications²⁴⁰. However, the proposal had not been taken up by the relevant authorities²⁴¹. The Institute does not have a horizontal mechanism to monitor implementation of its recommendations by the public authorities but intends to develop this in the future. The follow-up is monitored individually with regard to specific recommendations and has been deemed satisfactory thus far²⁴².

The Government plans to come with a proposal for legislation to clarify the tax-exempt status of non-profit organisations but no concrete progress has yet been made. The 2022 Rule of Law Report recommended to Germany to ‘take forward the plan to adapt the tax-exempt status for non-profit organisations with a view to address the challenges which the currently applicable rules present for their operation in practice, taking into account European standards on funding for civil society organisations’²⁴³. In line with the commitment in the coalition agreement²⁴⁴, the Government intends to come forward with legislation to clarify the current situation in 2023²⁴⁵, but no concrete steps have been taken so far. While the administrative decree adopted in January 2022²⁴⁶ appears to have brought improvements primarily for civil society organisations (CSOs) engaging in occasional activities that could be considered political²⁴⁷, stakeholders note that certain terms in the decree are insufficiently clear and create new challenges in practice²⁴⁸. Moreover, CSOs confirm that challenges persist in practice due to the currently applicable legislation beyond the scope of this decree²⁴⁹ and that CSOs increasingly face threats and legal action by political opponents who aim to prevent them from participating to public debate by threatening a loss of the public-benefit status²⁵⁰. A representative survey of CSOs published in March 2023 shows that 5% of CSOs indicate that they would like to be more politically active but refrain out of fear of losing their public benefit ²³⁹ The SCA in particular encouraged the German Institute for Human Rights to advocate for amendments to that would strengthen its protection mandate, including its capacity to monitor and have access to places of deprivation of liberty, to access classified documents, and to visit certain facilities. 2022 Rule of Law Report, Country Chapter on the rule of law situation in Germany, p. 24 and Contribution from ENNHRI for the 2023 Rule of Law Report, p. 268.

status²⁵¹. Council of Europe recommendations underline that any form of public support for NGOs should be governed by clear and objective criteria²⁵². As no concrete reform has been taken forward and challenges in practice persist, no progress was yet made on the implementation of the 2022 recommendation so far.

A new draft ‘democracy promotion’ law aims to provide more long-term, age independent and more needs-based federal funding to civil society projects on democracy, pluralism and political education. Civil society space continues to be considered as ‘open’²⁵³, though stakeholders note certain instances of attacks against civil society and activists both online and physically, for example in the context of climate-related protests²⁵⁴. On 14 December 2022, the Government presented a draft ‘democracy promotion law’²⁵⁵, which aims to provide more long-term project funding in the fields of democracy, promoting societal pluralism, extremism prevention and political education. It will create an explicit federal mandate to support such projects if they are of nationwide interest. Currently, the Federal Government can often only fund pilot projects on a yearly basis and for youth-related projects. The volume covered by the federal funding programme ‘Demokratie Leben’ has also been increased to EUR 182 million²⁵⁶. Stakeholders have generally welcomed the draft law as providing more sustainable funding²⁵⁷, though they have criticised that benefitting from the public benefit status for tax exemptions is a condition to receive funding, given the persisting challenges in this respect²⁵⁸. The law foresees that CSOs which have not yet received this designation, can prove through other means that their goals are generally compatible with the public benefit status²⁵⁹. The law is now under consideration in Parliament. As a separate initiative, the commitment in the coalition agreement for a national engagement strategy²⁶⁰ will be taken forward by the Federal Foundation for Engagement and the national network of voluntary associations, who will launch a participatory process for elaborating such a strategy²⁶¹.
