

2026 Rule of Law Report - targeted stakeholder consultation

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

The annual Rule of Law Report lies at the centre of the Annual Rule of Law Cycle, which acts as a preventive tool, deepening multilateral dialogue and joint awareness of rule of law issues. So far, six editions of the Rule of Law Report have been published since 2020.

As every year, the Commission would like to invite the stakeholders to provide contributions to the 2026 Rule of Law Report. On the basis of these contributions and on-going developments, further targeted questions may be shared at a later stage of preparation of the 2026 Rule of Law Report, in particular in the context of country visits, or bilateral contacts.

The Commission invites stakeholders to provide contributions which include:

- (1) developments and measures taken in relation to the recommendations in the 2025 report,
- (2) developments related to topics covered in the 2025 country chapters, as well as any other new developments related to the rule of law.

The input should consist of a short summary, if possible in English, covering the areas referred to below. Legislation or other documents may be referenced with a link. Contributions should focus on significant developments since the last Rule of Law Report both as regards the legal framework and its implementation in practice.

This questionnaire also integrates the separate questionnaire on the single market from last year. In addition to these specific questions, respondents to the questionnaire are invited to consider the Single Market dimension, including any relevant cross-border issues, in all their answers.

Where questions of particular relevance under the single market dimension, this is indicated before the relevant question.

[1] Unless the information was already submitted in the input for the previous Rule of Law Reports.

Type of information to be included:

D) Any other relevant developments

- National authorities are free to add any further information, which they deem relevant; however, this should be short and to the point.

Where relevant, please also indicate whether the developments reported are linked to the implementation of reforms and investments under the national Recovery Resilience Plan. To simplify your answers to the questionnaire, if there are no developments, it is sufficient to indicate this and the information covered in the contributions for the previous Rule of Law Reports does not need not be repeated.

D. The enabling framework for civil society

Measures regarding the framework for civil society organisations and human rights defenders (e.g. legal framework and its application in practice incl. registration, transparency and dissolution rules)

5000 character(s) maximum

While Portugal maintains a generally enabling legal framework for the registration and formal operation of civil society organisations, significant gaps remain in its practical application and in the broader policy environment affecting human rights defenders.

There are currently no systematic legal or policy safeguards specifically designed to protect civil society organisations and human rights defenders from harassment, intimidation, or politically motivated interference. Although most registration and transparency requirements are not, in themselves, excessively burdensome - excepting the registration for recognition as Public Utility Entity - which allows for access to public funding -, the absence of clear protective provisions leaves organisations exposed to hostile narratives, public stigmatization, and targeted attacks without adequate institutional support. In practice, the legal framework does not sufficiently prevent indirect restrictions on civil society activity. The lack of regular and structured institutional dialogue mechanisms - such as the prolonged inactivity of the Development Cooperation Forum for Development NGOs sector - limits civil society's ability to participate in policymaking and to raise concerns regarding operational barriers and safety risks. This weakens the practical effectiveness of existing legal guarantees.

Furthermore, the broader political and regulatory context has contributed to legal uncertainty. Repeated legislative interruptions and changes have stalled key strategies and regulatory instruments relevant to civil society action, including frameworks related to development education/citizenship education and sustainable development. These delays hinder long-term planning and undermine the stability required for effective and independent civil society work.

Finally, while there are no formal dissolution measures currently being applied against organisations, public discourse - particularly from far-right political actors - has increasingly questioned the legitimacy of civil society organisations and foundations. In the absence of clear legal and political safeguards, such narratives risk paving the way for future restrictive measures and contribute to a chilling effect on civil society and human rights defenders.

Despite the growing risks faced by civil society organisations and human rights defenders, Portugal lacks centralized mechanism for data collection, early warning, or risk assessment related to verbal harassment, physical violence, online abuse, or coordinated intimidation campaigns. Dedicated support services (such as legal assistance, psychosocial support, or rapid response mechanisms) remain limited or fragmented. Similarly, access to effective remedies for affected organisations and individuals remains insufficient. Investigations into attacks and threats are often slow, and accountability mechanisms lack transparency, reinforcing a sense of impunity. This situation discourages reporting and further exposes civil society actors to repeated harm.

Taken together, these rules, practices, and omissions contribute to a shrinking civic space in Portugal. Ensuring the effective operation and safety of civil society organisations and human rights defenders requires proactive measures: robust protection frameworks, systematic monitoring of threats, clear political condemnation of violence and hate speech, safeguards against stigmatization and smear campaigns, and accessible remedies that guarantee accountability and redress.

Rules and practices having an impact on the effective operation and safety of civil society organisations and human rights defenders. This includes measures to protect them from attacks – verbal, physical or on-line –, intimidation, legal threats incl. SLAPPs, negative narratives or smear campaigns, measures capable of affecting the public perception of civil society organisations, etc. It also includes measures to monitor threats or attacks and dedicated support services, as well as available remedies

Recent developments in Portugal raise serious concerns regarding the rules, practices, and omissions that negatively affect the effective operation, safety, and public perception of civil society organisations (CSOs) and human rights defenders.

Civil society actors have increasingly become targets of verbal, physical, and symbolic attacks by far-right and neo-Nazi groups. Violent assaults against volunteers of organisations distributing food to people experiencing homelessness, as well as attacks on individual citizens and public figures, illustrate a pattern of intimidation aimed at discouraging solidarity, humanitarian action, and civic engagement. These incidents directly endanger the physical safety of CSO staff and volunteers and compromise their ability to operate freely.

The growing normalization of hate speech in public discourse further exacerbates this hostile environment. Anti-immigrant, anti-activist, and discriminatory narratives - sometimes promoted by elected representatives - contribute to stigmatization and delegitimization of civil society organisations, human rights defenders, and the communities they support. Such narratives shape public perception in ways that erode trust in CSOs, fuel social hostility, and indirectly legitimize acts of violence and harassment, including online attacks and smear campaigns.

Civil society organisations working on LGBT+ rights and migrant support have also faced direct interference by extremist groups, including disruptions of public events and acts of intimidation. These practices restrict freedom of association and assembly and create a chilling effect, forcing organisations to divert resources toward security and risk management rather than programmatic work. To date, there is no comprehensive public framework to prevent or respond to such coordinated intimidation tactics.

Concerns also arise from law enforcement practices during demonstrations. Reports of excessive use of force against protesters, notably in mobilizations supporting Palestine and climate action, raise questions about the proportionality of policing and the protection of the right to peaceful assembly. The lack of transparent monitoring mechanisms and independent evaluation of police conduct undermines trust and leaves human rights defenders without effective guarantees of protection during public actions.

While government policy documents acknowledge the importance of Non-Governmental Development Organisations (NGDOs), this recognition remains narrow and sector-specific, failing to encompass the broader spectrum of civil society actors and human rights work. This selective framing is particularly concerning in a political context where far-right programs openly advocate for restrictions on civil society, including foundations, reinforcing negative narratives that portray CSOs as illegitimate or politically biased actors.

Institutional practices further weaken civil society participation and protection. The Development Cooperation Forum - the only formal mechanism for structured NGDO participation - has not convened since September 2023, despite regulatory requirements for annual meetings. This absence of dialogue limits civil society's ability to raise concerns related to safety, operational barriers, and threats, and reflects a broader pattern of disengagement from participatory governance.

The National Strategy for Citizenship Education (ENEC) approved recently, raises further concerns regarding state practices that affect public perception of civil society and human rights work. The removal of mainstreaming gender equality and sexual education content, and the shift toward an individualistic and economically driven concept of citizenship, undermines collective values, social responsibility, and human rights education. This approach indirectly marginalizes organisations working on equality, inclusion, and social justice, reinforcing narratives that delegitimize their role in society. The approved National Strategy for Citizenship Education further restricts the role of civil society organisations by limiting their participation in schools within the Citizenship Education curriculum. By narrowing the scope for collaboration between schools and independent civil society actors, the ENEC reduces students' exposure to plural, rights-based, and experiential learning approaches that CSOs are uniquely positioned to provide. This restriction not only weakens civic and human rights education but also undermines the legitimate role of civil society organisations as partners in public education. In practice, it contributes to the marginalisation of organisations working on equality, inclusion, democratic participation, and social justice, and reinforces a state-driven and less participatory model of citizenship education that is disconnected from societal realities. Portugal lacks a comprehensive system to monitor threats and attacks against CSOs and human rights defenders.

Organisation of financial support for civil society organisations and human rights defenders (e.g. framework to ensure access to funding, and for financial viability, taxation/incentive/donation systems, measures to ensure a fair distribution of funding)

5000 character(s) maximum

In Portugal, public financial support for civil society organisations (CSOs) and human rights defenders remains limited, fragmented, and unevenly distributed, affecting both access to funding and long-term financial viability. Public funding frameworks are largely sector-specific and project-based, offering little stability or predictability for organisations engaged in human rights, equality, citizenship education, and advocacy work. While funding for Non-Governmental Development Organisations (NGDOs), especially by Camões Institute, has been maintained and has seen slight increases in recent years, this support only reaches about 30 of about 150 organisations with this statute. Additionally, there are no regular funding opportunities for other civil society organisations operating in areas such as gender equality, migrant rights, climate justice, or civic participation. This selective approach creates structural imbalances within the civil society ecosystem.

Access to funding is further constrained by complex administrative requirements and short funding cycles, which disproportionately disadvantage smaller organisations and grassroots initiatives. Core funding and institutional support mechanisms remain scarce, limiting organisations' capacity to retain staff, and respond to emerging risks or attacks. This directly affects the resilience of civil society organisations and human rights defenders in an increasingly hostile environment.

Taxation and incentive systems, including donation and philanthropy frameworks, remain underdeveloped and insufficiently attractive to promote diversified and sustainable funding sources. The lack of strong fiscal incentives for private donations and corporate social responsibility further increases dependence on limited public funds and external donors.

Overall, the current organisation of financial support does not adequately ensure equitable access to funding, financial sustainability, or institutional independence for civil society organisations and human rights defenders. Strengthening funding frameworks through diversified sources, fair and transparent allocation mechanisms, improved fiscal incentives, and increased availability of core funding is essential to safeguard a vibrant and resilient civil society in Portugal.

Cross-pillar elements: cross-border rule of law issues related to the Single Market

If there are any significant challenges concerning the Single Market you have been facing in a cross-border context relating to any of the four pillars of the report, including for example issues with market access and the conditions for economic activities, that you would like to highlight, please do so here.

Given the cross-cutting nature of this question, it is included as a separate section in the questionnaire. Information collected under this question will however be integrated under the relevant existing pillar(s) of the Report.
